A Mouse Under the Paw

Former President Herbert Hoover's policy of withdrawing nationally to an ivory tower over which he would hang armor plate, unfortunately coincided with the Christmas period when the national mind was at its lowest emotional ebb and when everywhere sons, husbands and fathers were most in the hearts of their families.

Mr. Hoover, who cannot help showing that his political thumb still hurts, suggested we build up a huge Navy and Army, that we patrol our shores and wait for the enemy to come get us.

This caused thousands of faces to glow with what seemed to them to be Mr. Hoover's vision. If he were wrong about prosperity being just around the corner in the thirties, he was surely right about the way to peace being a retirement to a national fortress.

It was to some an appealing policy. It would bring everyone to these shores. To be sure, they would not be at home, but at least they would be near home. They would not be returned to their jobs and their families, but they would not be in some foreign place.

Suicide

So, there is some reaction to Mr. Hoover's suggestion that we all go in a hole and pull the hole in after us. Happily, there was no great national acceptance of it. A more unrealistic, dangerous and impossible plan has not yet been made than this one by Mr. Hoover.

What he proposes is national suicide.

If we had some 10,000,000 men in a huge Army and Navy, and if their duties were as Mr. Hoover suggests, we would have a huge and varied flotilla constantly at sea. Indeed, we would of necessity keep it on patrol from the icy distances of the polar regions in the north to those at the south. We would maintain large forces of troops on patrol and in great reserve strength at strategically located depots and camps. The expanded Air Force would be large and in operational patrols and training.

Having set up that plan, we would then wait.

The enemy would be delighted. He, too, wants time. All his troubles would then be over. The Hoover plan would make us the mouse underneath the cat's paw. He might lift it now and then to let us scamper a few feet away, but always he would clamp down. If we seemed to relax, the enemy could send patrols of ships and concentrate landing craft in Summer on the Bering Sea. That would put us under a strain which he could continue all Summer. In Winter bombers could move toward our shores and maneuver within range of our radar screen, and then turn back and out of it.

The enemy could keep us continually harassed and in a state of nerves, without any loss or great expense. As we fretted and strained, he could consolidate all the great manpower and technology at his command.

Mr. Hoover's plan is so fantastically fatal and immature that it is the more revealing of the astonishing weakness of this bumbling good and sincere man, than any of his futile words and deeds in the time when he became the symbol of failure and defeat.

The Map

One can look at the map and see where our men will be fighting if a war of world proportions should come to us. If Europe is overrun, as it can be, there will be Spain and North Africa. Those regions will be our defense line if the fighting comes. Great Britain would continue, for a time, though she is most vulnerable to atomic bombing even though she stoutly resists invasion.

But Spain, Morocco, Algeria and Liberia, with whom we have treaties, will be the site of our bombing bases.

Turkey would be on our side, too. And there would be a struggle for other African regions.

We have one great asset—a head start in the atom bomb.

We must have bases from which to drop it.

Mr. Hoover would have us abandon our best weapon and crawl into a concrete box in which the enemy would let us fatten until he was ready with the axe.

The best defense remains an offense.

Sunny Christmas Finds Youngsters Playing Outdoors

Scots Blamed for Loss of Relic Held Priceless, Used in Coronation

By TOM OCHILTREE

LONDON, Dec. 25—(AP)—Thieves believed motivated by intense Scottish nationalism stole the ancient Stone of Scone from Westminster Abbey Monday. The priceless relic is a central fixture in the coronation of British kings.

The thieves conducted their getaway so well Scotland Yard detectives and police throughout Britain still were without a clue after an intense Christmas Day hunt.

Nationalists and even the more moderate home rule advocates in Scotland cheered the news that the stone had been removed from the Abbey where it had rested since 1296.

In removing the 336-pound stone, the thieves broke a large splinter off the leg of the Coronation Throne, the oldest piece of furniture in the Abbey. Twenty-seven monarchs have been crowned on it, including Britain's present ruler, George VI.

The stone had rested underneath the throne. Its position symbolized the union of the crowns of England and Scotland in the seventeenth century.

John MacCormick, Chairman of the Scottish Covenant Movement, said whatever the outcome of the "present adventure," he hoped the stone ultimately would be kept in Scotland except on coronation occasions. He continued:

"The Stone of Destiny (Scottish name for the stone) properly belongs to the people of Scotland. Under the terms of the Treaty of Northampton in 1328, the stone, which is the ancient symbol of Scottish nationality, was to be returned to Scotland, but that treaty was never observed."

Nearly 2,000,000 Scots last year signed the Scottish Covenant, a petition for a greater measure of home rule along the lines of that enjoyed by Northern Ireland.

Supporters of the covenant have made it clear they are completely loyal to the King. However, a small extreme group in Scotland desires to cut all ties with England. Between the two groups are other grades of Scottish nationalism.

R. E. Muirhead, of the Scottish Nationalist Secretariat at Glasgow, told a reporter he had no knowledge of any plot to steal the stone.

Nigel Trander, a Scottish covenant leader, said:

"This venture may appear foolish and childish on the surface but it will have the effect down south of focusing attention on Scotland's complaints. It takes a lot to get any news of Scotland's national existence into the English press and this sort of thing is the only type of home rule

W. German Chief Warns Of Attack

Special to The New York Times and The Atlanta Constitution

FRANKFORT, Dec. 25—In a Christmas broadcast from Bonn, Federal Chancellor Konrad Adenauer Monday reasserted the West German government's determination to defend the nation "together with other peace-loving nations."

"Those who want peace must collect their strength and courage for defense of their vital principles against the threatening attack" the Chancellor declared.

Although Dr. Adenauer has not yet replied to Soviet Zone Premier Otto Grotewohl's letter proposing direct negotiations on a basis of the Prague proposals, Monday's forthright message indicated that the West German government has not been frightened out of its stand favoring rearmament.

The Chancellor touched on another obstacle to reconciliation between the Communist and non-communist German regimes when he said "thousands of German prisoners of war, conscripted workers, men and women languish in inhuman slavery and thousands of their relations in Germany are filled with deepest distress."

Dr. Adenauer declared:

"We will not abandon hopes that peace will be preserved in the coming year. But we should not deceive ourselves that peace is exposed to very grave threats. A large part of the world has abandoned ethical and spiritual ideals of Christianity and formed a power that threatens the peaceful and freedom-loving nations . . . I hope that my anxieties are unfounded and that the wisdom of responsible statesmen will maintain peace."

Road Deaths 14 in State, 492 In U. S.

Violence Claims 624 Over Nation

Death on the nation's highways over the Christmas weekend climbed to a postwar record of 492 persons Monday night while Georgia recorded a loss of 14 lives. The State's road toll this year is four more than in 1949.

As the three-day Yule holiday season neared an end, deaths due to other than highway traffic, such as fire and exposure, climbed to 113 to give the nation an overall toll of 624.

The National Safety Council's estimate of 440 traffic deaths for the 78-hour period had already been far surpassed early Monday night.

In addition to the 14 deaths in Georgia, a number of persons received less-severe injuries in highway crashes in Atlanta and over the State.

A highway crash two miles from McDonough on highway 42 killed one man and injured three others late Monday night. Listed as dead when he arrived at Grady Hospital was Marcus S. Patton, 88, of 1071 Oxford Rd., N. E. Injured in the same accident were Mr. and Mrs. James R. Patten, Sr., and their 17-month-old son, James R. Patten, Jr., all of Valdosta.

Walter Lewallen, 36, of Route 1, Austell, was instantly killed early Monday when the automobile he was driving went out of control and overturned on U. S. Highway 23 at the Norcross city limits, the State Patrol said. Louie W. Allen, of 756 Echo St., N. W., a mechanic and a passenger, was slightly injured.

Sgt. R. J. Cleghorn and Trooper W. L. Reed of the Gainesville Patrol District said the auto overturned several times down the center of the road.

At Richland early Monday, Murlon Hayes, manager of a Columbus shoe store, died from injuries received in an automobile collision that instantly killed his wife Sunday. Walton Rice, of Orlando, Fla., driver of the other car, was reported in critical condition at a Richland hospital. State Troopers have charged Rice with second degree murder and with driving while under the influence of intoxicants.

At Dublin, two persons were hospitalized, two motor vehicles demolished, and an electric power

UN Rallies to Fight Again South of Parallel

Withdrawal Called War Epic; 100,000 Civilians Evacuated

TOKYO, Dec. 25—(AP)—The entire United Nations' defense against the Red aggressors shifted south of Korea's 38th Parallel Monday with completion of the epic seaborne withdrawal of 105,000 troops from a tiny northeastern beachhead surrounded by massed Chinese and Korean Communist armies.

Breathing fire and vowing to fight anew, the first of the American, South Korean and some British troops of the U. S. Tenth Corps already were in positions around Pusan and Pohang, in far southeast Korea.

Their last man and last gun, plus about 100,000 anti-Communist North Korean civilians, sailed from the demolished Port of Hungnam on Christmas Eve.

The Tenth Corps remained intact, a fighting army with its weapons and supplies.

The deliberate, orderly retirement was completed Christmas Eve. Hailed as one of the most remarkable accomplishments of modern warfare, it was announced on Christmas Day—just six months to the day after the Soviet-trained North Korean army invaded South Korea.

The North Korean invaders were smashed back and scattered, and just one month ago U. S. Tenth Corps troops stood on Korea's border facing Red Manchuria.

Monday, however, no United Nations forces remained north of the 38th Parallel, the old north-south frontier that split Korea in half.

The vast armies of Communist China had intervened, forcing the U. S. Eighth Army in the west into a hasty 120-mile retreat, and missing destruction of the Tenth Corps only because of the historic beachhead withdrawal.

Monday the Red invaders had edged within 21 miles of Seoul, the Southern capital, in the preliminaries of an all-out offensive. They had threatened to launch it on Christmas Day, but it failed to come.

The Tenth Corps withdrawal, applauded by President Truman as "the best Christmas present I could have," was made in 14 fighting, freezing days and nights.

For two solid weeks the thrusting Reds were held at bay by naval guns, planes, artillery and determined doughboys while 109 naval vessels completed the unprecedented, orderly retirement. They took their weapons and vast

Rear Guard Safe at Pusan, Weeps in Joy

By JOSEPH QUINN

PUSAN, Korea, Dec. 25—(U.P.)—Tough Marines and GI's wept Christmas morning when they reached this safe harbor.

They were the last of the soldiers snatched from the Communist trap in Northeast Korea, and they cried with joy when their armada of rescue ships anchored in this friendly port.

Clean-shaven, bright-eyed, tired, clutching their weapons and ammunition, they trudged down gangplanks. They had been bathed, well-fed and thawed out on the trip down.

Their buddies, evacuated earlier, unashamedly cried also as they rushed up to embrace the fighting rear guard—who were not expendable.

Navy and Army officers were wet-eyed. Even the Korean orphans and refugees ashore on their way to GI-sponsored Christmas parties cheered wildly as the men entered sanctuary.

Symbolic of it all was the blood-encrusted hull of the M-26 medium tank glistening in the bright winter sun as it was lowered to Pier No. 1.

It was only one of the armored vehicles which fought from the icy mountains of Northeastern Korea to the escape port of Hungnam, carrying wounded, most of whom had to be strapped to the hull. It was the blood of these courageous "Leathernecks" that shone in the sun.

"That tank never stopped fighting and it brought back all the wounded it could carry and for my money that's living up to the best traditions of the Marine

Vast Chinese Secrets Bared, M'Arthur Says

Destruction of Allies Averted By Thrust, General Believes

By LINDESAY PARROTT

Special to The New York Times and The Atlanta Constitution

TOKYO, Dec. 25—The withdrawal of the United States Tenth Corps from the Hungnam beachhead in Northeastern Korea completed readjustment of the United Nations positions forced by the Chinese intervention in the war, Gen. MacArthur said in a special communique Tuesday morning.

The UN commander said the corps now has moved to a juncture with the U. S. Eighth Army in the West in a successful operation with light casualties and no material loss.

He announced the Allies now will build up strength in Korea and resume the advance against Communist forces.

Gen. MacArthur, in a message commending the skill and courage of the Navy, Air and Army field commanders, said the UN forces had met the test of Chinese intervention and had "survived" without marked diminution of its strength or resources despite the overwhelming manpower of the invaders from across the Manchurian border.

At the same time, Gen. MacArthur asserted that the UN advance which ran into the massive concentration of Chinese fourth field army under Gen. Lin Piao in the war last November, was the "sole expedient" by which Communist intentions in Korea could be accurately tested.

The powerful resistance of the Chinese fourth army before the UN withdrawals from north of Pyongyang "unmasked the fiction of 'volunteer' participation," by the Chinese in the Korean battle.

"In its broad implications, I consider that these operations initiated Nov. 24 and carried through to this re-deployment, have served a very significant purpose—possibly in the general result the most significant and fortunate of any conducted during the course of the Korean campaign," Gen. MacArthur said.

"The might of a major military nation was suddenly thrown against this relatively small United Nations command but without attaining a decision. Due to intervening circumstances beyond our power to control or even detect, we did not achieve the United Nations' objective.

"But at a casualty cost less than that experienced in the comparable period of defensive fighting on the Pusan perimeter we exposed before too late secret political and military decisions of enormous scope and threw off balance enemy preparations aimed at surreptitiously massing power capable of destroying our forces with one mighty extended blow.

"No command ever fought more gallantly or effectively under conditions of restraint and handicap and no command could have acquitted itself to better advantage under prescribed missions and delimitations involving unprecedented risk and jeopardy."

"No intelligence service in the world," Gen. MacArthur said, "could have penetrated the screen which the Chinese succeeded in throwing around movements into Korea from the sanctuary in Manchuria, only a night's march from the Korean battleground.

"Political intelligence failed to penetrate the iron curtain and provided no substantial information of intent," the United Nations commander's message said. "Field intelligence was handicapped by the severest of limitations. Aerial reconnaissance was tions. Aerial reconnaissance beyond the border which was a normal source of field intelligence was forbidden.

"This left ground reconnaissance in force as the proper, indeed, the sole expedient."

Chinese intervention against the U. S. 8th Army south of Yalu River, Gen. MacArthur pointed out, was undertaken "without customary notice of belligerency."

"In face of this new force the 8th Army was withdrawn to a closely integrated front to there await a logistical build-up which would permit a resumption of our advance in attack formation," Gen. MacArthur added. The UN forces had "come through well

Holiday Cut By Truman For Parley

To Fly Back Today; Acheson Consults

By PAUL P. KENNEDY

Special to The New York Times and The Atlanta Constitution

KANSAS CITY, Dec. 25—President Truman, after a lengthy telephone conversation with Secretary of State Acheson, has decided to cut short his Christmas vacation by one day and return to Washington Tuesday afternoon instead of Wednesday morning.

The President, Secretary Acheson, George C. Marshall, Secretary of Defense, and Gen. Omar N. Bradley, chairman of the joint chiefs of staff, will hold a conference at the White House Tuesday night. Mr. Truman, it was announced, will set the time for the meeting after he arrives at Blair House Tuesday afternoon.

The President is scheduled to leave municipal airport here at 2 p. m. Tuesday in his private plane, the Independence. Originally he was scheduled to leave at about 10 a. m. Wednesday. The trip from Kansas City to Washington normally takes about four hours.

The announcement was made late Monday afternoon by Joseph Short, newly appointed White House press secretary. Short said the three will meet to "draw together arrangements being made for Gen. Eisenhower's departure, and for requirements in Korea in light of the activities of the Chinese Communists there." Short repeatedly emphasized that "nothing new or critical has developed," but he added that the meeting Tuesday night is "important."

To be discussed at the meeting Tuesday night also, according to Short, will be the problems of preparedness at home.

The decision for the President to return to Washington a day early, Short said, was arrived at during a telephone conversation between

HUNGRY PUPS FINALLY GET HOLIDAY FOOD

Ptl B. F. Raines feeds hungray animals in pet shop

Hungry Pet Shop Dogs Kill Pup in Window

By KEELER McCARTNEY

A near-riot shattered a quiet Christmas Day in Atlanta after hungry dogs in a Forsyth Street pet shop window were observed killing a young puppy, police said.

More than 50 persons were gathered around the front window of the Richard H. Johnston Pet Shop at 149 Forsyth St., S. W., when officers arrived in response to frantic calls. Indignant motorists abandoned autos in the street to add their heated protests to those yelling on the sidewalk.

Two Doberman Pinschers among a half-dozen dogs on display in the front window evidently were the front window appeared crazed with hunger, witnesses told Sgt. W. E. Eddleman and Ptl. B. F. Raines. They turned on a Doberman Pinscher puppy, killed it and were placidly chewing on the body.

Eddleman, unable to contact the owner by telephone, called for Capt. E. L. Sikes. "Kick the window in," spectators shouted angrily. "You can't let a thing like that go on."

Sikes ordered a rear window broken. Raines was lowered inside the building with a rope. Dozens of hungry dogs in pens throughout the building snapped at their wire cages as Raines attempted to distribute a small amount of dried dog food he found inside the building. He said none of the dogs had water.

Patrolmen chanced upon a grocery store at Washington Street and Trinity Avenue, where the owner had opened briefly. They purchased nine cans of dog food.

Raines said the dogs snapped at his hands and arms while he distributed the food.

"They would almost go crazy when they could even smell the food," he declared.

"We don't know how long they were without food and water," Sikes said. "But anyone could tell they were starved and it's possible they hadn't been fed since Saturday."

After serving the dogs the officers boarded up the pet shop window. Dozens of witnesses volunteered to appear in court.

Richard Johnston, operator of the shop, said he was grieved that the trouble happened in his shop, but said it was not due to neglect.

"I came to the shop about 11:30 a. m. and fed them," he said, "and they were all right when I left about 3:30 p. m." Johnston said it was routine procedure to feed and water the dogs, and then take their pans from the pen. He discovered the trouble, he said, when he returned to the shop Monday night to feed them again.

"We've never had any trouble like this before. It wasn't due to neglect," Johnston said. "We are taking as good care of them as the puppies will let us."

Sikes said the owner had been booked for cruelty to dumb animals.

$750,000 Fire Sweeps Hotel In W. Virginia

HUNTINGTON, W. Va., Dec. 25, (AP) — A $750,000 fire swept the 75-room Adelphia Hotel and an adjoining building Monday. No one was injured.

The fire, which also destroyed the top floors of the Carolina building, adjoining the hotel, and caused heavy water damage, was brought under control in about two hours.

Fire Chief Floyd L. Crouse said the fire started in the hotel elevator motor in a superstructure which was built on top of the four-story building.

Occupants of the hotel, many of them elderly permanent guests, were quickly evacuated, as were patrons of the Charles Restaurant, located on the first floor of the Carolina building.

stores of supplies with them to fight again in South Korea.

Maj. Gen. Edward M. Almond, Tenth Corps Commander, in announcing the end of the operation, disclosed that "all elements are either at sea or landed in the Pusan-Pohang concentration area," near the southeast tip of Korea.

Pusan was the old beachhead perimeter which the U. S. Eighth Army held against heavy odds last Summer until their breakout to the north following the Sept. 15 Tenth Corps landing at Inchon.

Word of the successful withdrawal drew a "well-done" for Gen. MacArthur and Gen. Almond from President Truman at his home in Independence, Mo.

UN commanders were jubilant at extricating five combat divisions—the U. S. First Marine Division, the U. S. Third and Seventh, and the Republic of Korea (ROK) Third and Capital Divisions—from the icy wastes of northeas Korea against overwhelming numbers of Communist troops.

Optimism was tempered Christmas Day by the menace of an impending gigantic Chinese Communist offensive in the west.

UN troops braced in their icy foxholes Christmas for the blow.

Communist leaflets, airdropped presumably at night over South Korean positions, had said the Chinese would attack "on Christmas" and urged South Koreans to surrender because they would be outnumbered four to one.

For four days Associated Press Correspondent William J. Waugh reported, UN forces have been in contact with Chinese troops around the 38th Parallel.

All through the long day and until 8 p. m. (6 a. m. Monday, E.S.T.) when Waugh's dispatch was written, he said, "the frozen battle line was ominously quiet except for patrol action." Patrols killed 41 Chinese and captured nine.

MacArthur's headquarters announced hostile units of undisclosed size reconnoitered the Sinsan area, only 21 miles north of Seoul. Other Red units were poised from 28 to 32 miles northwest and northeast of Seoul.

South Korean army headquarters said Chinese Reds "appeared in many places" along the parallel from the extreme west coast to within 40 miles of the east coast. Since Korea is some 160 miles wide at the parallel, this would mean the Reds were strung out for at least 120 miles along the prewar frontiers.

At this critical juncture, Lt. Gen. Matthews B. Ridgway, the new Commander of the U. S. Eighth Army, arrived in Tokyo Monday night by air from Washington. He replaces Lt. Gen. Walton H. Walker, who was killed Saturday in a jeep accident.

At Seoul—closely menaced for the second time in six months by Red forces, the South Korean National Assembly decided to adjourn. It plans to reconvene next month, "probably in Pujan," a reliable source said.

President Syngman Rhee sadly called upon his government to evacuate the capital as the Chinese forces drew closer.

In addition to the Red units at Sinsan, MacArthur's late Monday war summary pinpointed 1,500 Reds in prepared positions at Kapyong, 32 miles northeast of the capital. An attack on Chunchon, 45 miles northeast of Seoul, was halted.

Other Red units were reported at Kaesong, Yongchon and Hwachon, all hubs on roads leading to Seoul.

The last man and last vehicle safely quit the Hungnam beachhead in the northeast at 2:36 p. m. Sunday, Gen. Almond said in his announcement Monday. The withdrawal has been under a close security cloak.

Vice Adm. C. Turner Joy, Commander of Naval forces in the Far East, said, "The only thing we left behind was the enemy."

On the last day, when final rear guard units "walked to the nearest exit" under a saturated curtain of rocket fire from covering ships offshore, not one casualty was suffered, Joy said.

The evacuation was termed "flawless" by the Navy. It was completed one day ahead of schedule by ships under the command of Rear Adm. James H. Doyle.

Doyle radioed Joy in Tokyo:

"No one will ever say we were pushed off this beach. It was walk, not run, to the nearest exit. They never laid a glove on us. Naval air and surface power saw to that."

The last to leave were "Frogmen"—the plucky underwater demolition teams which wrecked buoys and marking places and left Hungnam unfit for navigation.

The port's loading facilities were smashed when four giant cranes were destroyed. They had helped lift 17,500 vehicles and 350,000 tons of supplies aboard American, British, Canadian and Norwegian evacuation ships.

Day and night, under the menacing pressure of 100,000 Chinese and at least 30,000 Korean Reds, the work of stripping Sungnam base had gone on.

A single Red platoon (possibly 50 men) tried to hit the beachhead defense Sunday, but was repelled.

Among the first to leave Hungnam were the First Marine Division veterans of the costly retreat from Shangjin reservoir in early December.

Their Commanding General, tough Maj. Gen. Oliver Prince Smith, said his men were "surprisingly fit" and added:

"But they're still mad. They don't like being pushed around.

"I still don't know what we will be called on to do next, but I'll tell you this, they (the Leathernecks) won't be pushed around by Chinese, North Koreans or anyone else."

AP Correspondent Tom Lambert, who has covered the frontlines since the first American troops arrived at the scene July 4, reported the withdrawal was in process as early as Dec. 10.

The U. S. Third Division remained on the beachhead as the rear guard.

The Communist horde drew closer each day. The big threat was that the Reds would spring out of the mountains and on to the flat lands which form a narrow apron around Hungnam. If they had broken through, the evacuation would have been seriously endangered.

Instead, relatively light Red forces probed constantly nearer as the Allies moved back.

Lambert said that towards the end artillery in some cases was wheel to wheel behind the contracting perimeter. Tanks sat in rows and gave gun support.

Flak wagons (anti-aircraft guns) were placed on hilltop positions around Hungnam to throw a line of fire on the Reds. Allied planes gave the beachhead constant cover.

The armada offshore included the battleship Missouri, with her great 16-inch guns, the heavy cruisers St. Paul and Rochester, eight destroyers and the mighty air arm of seven fleet carriers. The task force was as large as many during World War II.

In air strikes Sunday Fifth Air Force planes killed or wounded 500 Red troops, 350 of them while marching into the industrial city of Hamhung, seven miles west of Hungnam.

The planes also destroyed 1,000 barrels of fuel, damaged 261 buildings and slashed at 46 North Korean towns.

Congressmen Fear A-Work Still Too Slow

By GEORGE E. REEDY, JR.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 25—(U.P.). Some members of the joint Congressional Atomic Energy Committee wonder whether the United States is building up its A-bomb stockpile fast enough in view of current world tension, it was disclosed Monday.

An informed committee source said these members agree that the new expansion program recently announced by the Atomic Energy Commission goes "85 or 90 percent" of the way toward meeting previous Congressional criticisms of the atomic program.

But he said they still wonder if the commission has gone as far and as fast as it should have to offset the threat of new Communist aggression.

"The Atomic Energy Commission is doing a splendid job and the expansion program is gratifying," this source said. "But there still is some question as to whether the program is truly 'all-out' in view of the tense international situation."

Some committee members are known to believe that their continued prodding was partly responsible for the current expansion of atomic production facilities. They have let it be known they plan to continue such tactics in hopes of achieving an even greater speed-up.

Stork-Derby Babies Run Close Race in Hospital

By PAUL JONES

While Santa was making his rounds in Atlanta early Monday morning, Ole Man Stork was winging his way over housetops here, too—engaging in a race to see which mother would give birth to the first Christmas baby.

The stork derby took place at Crawford W. Long Memorial Hospital between Mrs. M. B. Cole, of 970 Columbia Ave., N. E., and Mrs. James W. Smith, of 1424 Boulevard Dr., N. E. Both gave birth to baby boys during the wee hours—Mrs. Cole's bundle of happiness arriving at 2:05 a. m. to become the city's first Yuletide baby. Mrs. Smith's infant arrived at 3:47 a. m.

YAKIMA, Wash., Dec. 25—(AP) — The Yakima Valley Memorial Hospital Maternity Department Monday announced the first Christmas baby came to Mr. and Mrs. Orval Noel.

Both mothers, now roommates at the hospital, were caught unprepared for names for their babies, since both had expected girls. Mrs. Cole said she tentatively had settled for Richard Terry as her son's name and Mrs. Smith said she guessed it would be Paul for her infant.

The two mothers were unaware that they were engaged in a race to see which would give birth to the first Yule baby.

The Cole infant weighed in at six pounds nine ounces; the Smith baby tipped the scales at six pounds seven ounces.

Babies, mothers—and fathers—were reported "doing fine."

TOKYO, Dec. 25—(INS)—The Navy has released the following box score statistics on the Hungnam withdrawal:

105,000 Americans and South Korean troops were withdrawn from beachhead in 12 days.

91,000 Korean civilians were taken out aboard naval vessels.

109 transport vessels, smallest of which was LST type, made a total of 193 payload trips from Hungnam.

Every vehicle and every operatable piece of equipment was removed and all supplies were either removed or destroyed. Vice Admiral Charles T. Joys said: "We didn't leave the enemy one thing he could use."

17,500 vehicles were removed.

350,000 tons of cargo removed.

First Marine Division with all equipment aboard ships Dec. 15. That night heavy cruisers and destroyers began bombardments that created firewall Chinese could not penetrate.

ROK Third and Capitol Divisions completed loading Dec. 17. American Seventh Division completed loading Dec. 20. Mighty Mo, "world's mightiest ship," began firing Friday.

About 4,000,000 pounds explosives blasted outside perimeter by Navy air surface units.

Marines and Navy carrier planes from Task Force 77 flew over 6,000 sorties sometimes in weather that forced them to wait while improvised snowplow cleared flightdecks.

There were no enemy aircraft or submarine contacts during operation.

Ilse's Consort Next for Trial

FRANKFURT, Germany, Dec. 25 — (U.P.) — German officials are preparing to try Martin Somer, "Hangman of Buchenwald Concentration Camp," for some of the worst atrocities perpetrated during the entire Nazi regime.

"We are going to try him as soon as we finish trying Ilse Koch," Bavarian State Prosecutor Hans Ilkow said. "Some people wanted us to try them together. But that would have been a mistake—even Ilse would have looked like an angel beside this man."

Somer, a former Nazi SS sergeant, was perhaps the most notorious of all murderers and torturers to the 50,000 prisoners in Buchenwald Camp.

Corps," said Cpl. William F. Moore of Cambridge, Mass.

"We fought with valor wherever we went," said the Marines' softspoken, ramrod commander, Maj. Gen. Oliver P. Smith, who never utters a word of profanity. "We defeated every Chinese unit we met," he said with quiet pride.

His corps, he said, abandoned none of its wounded, none of its weapons, none of its supplies or equipment.

"Give us more Marines and more equipment and let us fight on," was the terse comment of Cpl. Lester Smith of Collistion, Ill.

"Sure we battled our way to the east coast, but that was in the wrong direction," added Pfc. John H. Smith of Leesburg, Fla.

These were the men who were taken from the beach at Hungnam while the Red hordes were held at bay by the curtain of fire and steel drawn by one of history's most intensive air and naval bombardments. They were the ones who had held the beach when their buddies had been evacuated earlier.

They still wore dirty, heavy Winter clothing. They were happy to be out of the battle zone, but many of them felt they could have held out on the beachhead all Winter and launched another offensive from there in the Spring.

The wounded were removed from the rescue fleet to the Swedish Red Cross hospital where 340 beds awaited them. Trucks, jeeps, ducks, artillery movers and other vehicles removed bore mute evidence—bullet and shrapnel holes.

The assistant division commander, Brig. Gen. Edward A. Craige, who led the first Marine brigade ashore in Korea, said there never had been a moment, "including right now," when the Leathernecks were not ready for battle.

In the ranks there were some who were ready to give up Korea, but most of them agreed with Craige.

"All Korea is not worth another American life," said Sgt. Charles E. Gunter of St. Louis, Mo.

"As far as I'm concerned the Chinks can have it," said Pfc. Gussie Taylor of Highland, N. J.

Sgt. J. D. Barton of Kansas City, Mo., said, "use the atom bomb." He wanted to go home to his wife and two children.

"We were doing all right against the Chinks and would have mopped them up proper if we were left alone," said Sgt. L. Smith of Philadelphia. His buddies nodded approval.

Cpl. Richard F. Wolfe, one of three brothers in the division, acknowledged they could have used "another Marine division or two" but he insisted the 'Leathernecks' should not have been pulled back "until we gave those laundrymen a good lesson." Wolfe and his brothers, Sgt. Walter L. Wolfe, Jr., and Pfc. George M. Wolfe live in Bethlehem, Pa.

"I don't like this running from the Chinks when we know we can beat hell outa them," complained Pfc. Robert L. Dillie, of Parker, Indiana.

Tibet's Ruler Reported Fleeing

NEW DELHI, India, Dec. 25—(AP)—Unconfirmed reports from Kalimpong said Monday the Dalai Lama, Tibet's 16-year-old spiritual and temporal ruler, has fled his capital of Lhasa en route to India. The reports said he was fearful Chinese Communists operating from Sinkiang across Western Tibet might later cut off the escape route.

Government sources said they had received no information on the reported flight.

GI's Flight to Berlin Stirs Cupid, St. Nick

BERLIN, Dec. 25 — (AP) — A young American soldier returned to his native Berlin Monday, was reunited with his girl friend from the Russian sector, arranged a quick wedding and got set to return to the U. S. a husband before the New Year.

All this happened in the home of Gerhard Nimz, a West Berlin policeman.

At 10 a. m. Nimz answered his doorbell and saw his son, Herbert, aged 20, who left Germany a year and a half ago for the United States.

Meanwhile, Herbert had become an American citizen and joined the Army. In the States he expressed a desire to see his girl in Berlin for Christmas. The Army and Air Force quickly arranged it. Nimz flew to Frankfurst and then entrained to Berlin.

Without knowing the boy would be here, the girl friend, 16-year-old Erika Busch, left the Soviet sector of the city Monday afternoon to pay a holiday call on the Nimz family. When she got there, she spied Herbert, leaped into his arms and burst into tears of joy.

With a certain amount of suspicious moisture around his eyes, Father Nimz took back what he said the day before when he heard the boy was coming to try to mary Erika.

He blessed the union and said anyone who traveled as far as his boy had come just to see a girl had the right to claim her for his wife.

At first, Father Nimz was of the opinion both were too young and that "East-West marriages don't work."

The boy immediately applied to American Army authorities in West Berlin to sanction the marriage and arrange for him to take his bride out of East Berlin to America.

Young Nimz said his bride-to-be could live with him at Fort Devens, Mass., where he is stationed.

"I've already arranged that," he said confidently.

A recruit, Nimz is one of the first postwar Germans to become both an American citizen and a soldier. He said he owes this to Gen. Lucius D. Clay, former U. S. Military Governor of Germany, who recommended him because of his role in German-American activities in Berlin during 1947 and 1948.

Talmadge Says Austerity Rules Out Gay Inaugural

By M. L. ST. JOHN

Preparing for a new four-year term as Chief Executive in what may be one of the most trying periods in Georgia's history, Gov. Talmadge announced Christmas Day there will be no gala Governor's ball following his second inauguration Jan. 9.

"Some have suggested a ball," the Governor said, "but I do not think it wise to have celebrations during this austere period when Georgia boys are dying on foreign soil."

The only social gathering marking the inauguration will be a reception given by Gov. and Mrs. Talmadge at the Executive Mansion from 4 to 6 p. m. Jan. 9.

"Every person in Georgia is invited," Talmadge stated.

Gov. Talmadge and Lt.-Gov. Marvin Griffin will take their oaths of office in simple ceremonies at 11 a. m. Jan. 9, in the House of Representatives chambers—instead of in the usually elaborate outdoor exercises held on the Capitol steps. The Rev. Charles Allen, pastor of Grace Methodist Church here, will give the invocation.

Following brief talks by Talmadge and Griffin, both of whom have completed two years in office and have been elected for new four-year terms, the program will move from the House to the Governor's office. There the oaths of office will be administered to state house officers who were elected in November.

The Georgia Legislature will convene Monday, Jan. 8, at 10 a. m. Its first week probably will be devoted to organization. House Speaker Fred Hand, House Clerk Joe Boone, and Senate Secretary George Stewart all are slated for re-election without opposition. Griffin and Hand will announce appointment of committees.

Some administration bills, along with plenty of local legislation, may be introduced during the first week.

The work of the important session will get underway in earnest, however, when Gov. Talmadge appears before the Senate and House about the second week of the session to deliver his budget message.

In this talk, he will outline the demands of the people for expanded State services in education, roads, welfare, and health—and call upon the General Assembly to enact a 3 per cent sales tax coordinated with a higher income tax.

Immediately following his message, administration bills implementing this program are expected to be introduced in the House.

Sen. Smith's Aide, Postal Worker Wed

OLD ORCHARD BEACH, Me., Dec. 25.—(AP)—A member of Senator Margaret Chase Smith's secretarial staff and a postal worker in the House of Representatives were married at a quiet, Christmas day wedding in the bride's home here Monday.

They are Larry Weldon Hooper, son of Mrs. Ella J. Hooper of Cowart's, N. C., and Miss Ruth Ellen Sawyer, who joined Mrs. Smith's office force last February.

The Rev. Herbert F. Aldrich, pastor of the Methodist Church here, performed the ceremony. The couple was attended by the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Horace Sawyer.

TV Defense Role Pictured By Sarnoff

NEW YORK, Dec. 25—(AP)—Television in the United States has grown in 1950 to a point where it can serve a major role in speeding the nation's defense mobilization efforts, a top broadcasting executive said Monday.

Brig. Gen. David Sarnoff, Chairman of the Board of the Radio Corporation of America, said there are 10,000,000 TV sets in America, with an audience of 40,000,000, and 107 TV stations.

"This is of tremendous importance to the country since it provides a new medium to supplement radio's vast audience in achieving fullest unity of purpose," Sarnoff said in a statement.

Television, he said, is providing "new and vital" aid to such causes as training air raid wardens, Red Cross work and direct appeals, in spreading visual information to the home.

To Find Lord's Prayer, See Luke or Matthew

Here's a Christmas story:

The phone rang on the Constitution City Desk on Christmas afternoon—a quiet time.

"Can you tell me where in the Bible I can find the Lord's Prayer?" asked William D. Allen, of 132 Tye St., S. E.

It was a strange question to pop up unexpectedly in a newspaper office. The question was posed to the "skeleton" staff putting out the paper. One reporter replied: "Fifth Chapter of Matthew," while others searched their memories of childhood Sunday School days. While the telephone answerer stalled for time, the staff thumbed through a Bible.

". . . it's an amazing thing," Allen was telling the City Desk, "nobody seems to know where to find the Lord's Prayer. I called Information on the telephone, and she transferred me to a supervisor, and she transferred me to The Journal, and whoever answered referred me to The Constitution . . ."

As the conversation continued, a reporter phoned his wife and got the answer, which the City Desk gave to Allen:

"The Lord's Prayer is in the Sixth Chapter of Matthew, starting with Verse 9, and is also in the Eleventh Chapter of Luke, starting with Verse 2."

Why did Allen want to know?

"My wife and I got into a discussion of which phrase was right," he said. "Is it 'forgive us our trespasses' or 'forgive us our debts'?"

The answer, said Dr. O. M. Seigler, pastor of the Cascade Baptist Church, who was called in as an authority, is: "Both. The earlier translation uses the word 'debts' while the later translation uses the word 'trespasses.' The spirit of the two words is the same, and either is correct."

Allen, who had started out to settle a question with his wife, finished his quest somewhat shocked: "I am surprised at the spiritual ignorance of people in Atlanta, which is known as a Bible center."

Atlanta School Pupils Blossom as Stage Stars

By BILL DIEHL

Broadway best look to its laurels. A bevy of grade school Thespians are on the loose in Atlanta and show promise of great things to come.

In their first show, "Sleeping Beauty," which boasts a cast of over 200, the Atlanta Children's Theater has been drawing rave applause from impressive audiences. And well it should. Considering a large portion of the cast members are under 10 years of age, the show is right skillfully done.

The subteen-age theater is the dream of drama teacher Edith Russell, who nursed a desire to give school kids a shot at the legitimate theater for many years. Her first try, "Robin Hood," flopped several seasons ago because it was not properly underwritten.

But Miss Russell didn't give up hope. She kept pushing a school theater guild while operating eight of her own children's theaters. A few weeks ago, endorsed by all the Atlanta school boards, she launched her second try. This time she successfully brought drama into the school room.

Entrance fee to the organization is moderate—it costs only a dollar. The school children also buy their own costumes, which ups the ante to about five dollars per play. Mothers handle most of the tutoring and dressing chores and direction falls solely on Miss Russell's shoulders.

And the whole idea is nonprofit. It's major objective: dramatic training for the school boy and girl.

With the drama door open to all children between the ages of six and 15, the theater group has an impressive membership of some 300 members and is growing all the time. The Lottie Hentschel School provides toe-dancers and ballet-steppers for all dance sequences.

The youngsters go for their work like they go for ice cream and Saturday matinees. In the wings, they prance about practicing their pirouettes, spinning on hard-toed shoes or slipping off to a corner by themselves to brush up on their lines. Backstage has all the atmosphere of a Broadway opening in miniature.

The success of Miss Russell's dream-baby is apparent. Previewed several weeks ago at North Fulton High, "Sleeping Beauty" drew such favorable comment it was played again a week later at O'Keefe. Once again raves brought the show back on stage, this time at Bass High.

Miss Russell had another one-nighter in Decatur City Auditorium and two more are planned following Christmas.

But the most impressive aspect of the entire experiment, as Miss Russell points out, is that it gives kids a chance to put their natural tendency to emote to good advantage. And it eats a nice hole in children's weekly hours of spare time.

Firecracker Tosser Killed By Gun Blast

FULTON, Miss., Dec. 25—(AP)—The sheriff here said a 60-year-old former schoolteacher shot and killed a youth who threw a firecracker on his porch Monday.

Sheriff Jim Gilliland said John V. Wilemon, 19, home for the holidays, was struck in the heart by a 12-gauge shotgun charge fired by Curtis Spencer at his home in near-by Clay Community, four miles east of here.

Gilliland said Wilemon and four other boys had been tossing firecrackers on Spencer's porch early Christmas morning. Spencer said he stepped out the door and fired his gun with no intention of hitting any of the youths.

The sheriff said Spencer told him: "I just thought they'd go away and leave me alone if I fired my gun off. I didn't aim at any of them."

Spencer was charged with murder, Gilliland said, and freed under $5,000 bond.

2 Men Held In Robberies Of 30 Hotels

Special to The New York Times and The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

NEW YORK, Dec. 25—Two robbers who admitted holding up 30 hotels in the past two weeks, nine of them on Christmas Eve, were held without bail on robbery charges Monday in felony court.

They waived hearings before Magistrate Benjamin Brenner, who ordered the cases referred to the grand jury. The prisoners, Joseph Trulio, 31, of this city and Joseph Bianco, 29, of Elmira, N. Y., told police they got $350 in the nine holdups.

They were arraigned on a complaint signed by Duncan Martin, night clerk of the Carlton Arms hotel, who said they held him up at midnight Christmas Eve, when the men started the crime spree.

After three hotels reported robberies an alarm was sent out describing the men as short and stocky and wearing raincoats. At 5:30 Monday morning Patrolman John Cyran went to the Elton hotel as a matter of routine. He saw the men approach the night clerk. The men registered and were assigned a room on the second floor. They then asked the clerk where a near-by restaurant was.

Patrolman Cyran, suspicious of the pair, waited near the elevator and when the men descended three minutes later the arrest was made. Money was found in their pockets but no weapons, police said.

"Why pick on hotels?" Magistrate Brenner asked.

Bianco replied: "Hotels are easier. They have big lobbies and you can make a quick getaway."

Both men have records of previous arrests, police reported.

FOOD, TOO

Ransacked Home Makes Bleak Yule

It was a bleak Christmas for the Randolph Yanceys, who live on Indian Creek Drive, two miles beyond Avondale.

The Yanceys returned home late Saturday from a photo studio on Ponce de Leon Ave., N. E., where the husband is employed.

They found almost every movable object missing from the home.

Two oil circulating heaters were ripped out; a large chair was gone from the living room; the only clothing they had left was what they wore; the ventilating fan was missing, along with a shotgun, and even the groceries for holiday weekend.

The living room rug, of which the Yanceys were especially proud, was still there. However, thieves pulled one of the oil heaters ruthlessly over the rug, ripping it and leaving a heavy trail of oil.

The only cheerful note was the Christmas presents. They were safely stored at the studio.

With no food, means of preparing it, or heat for the holidays, Yancey, his wife and three small children went to spend Christmas with his father, Newton M. Yancey, 826 Oakdale Rd., N. E. DeKalb County officers began searching for the missing household furnishings.

Yancey's wife and children were with him at the studio while the home was being ransacked.

Minister Mesta Gives Best Party

LUXEMBOURG, Dec. 25—(AP)—Six hundred Luxembourg orphans Monday went to a "real American Christmas party" given by Mrs. Perle Mesta, the U. S. Minister.

The kids came to the "Salle des Fetes," normally used only for diplomatic and civic occasions in specially hired cars from orphanages in all parts of the Grand Duchy.

Santa Claus stole the show as he dealt out a toy and items of warm clothing to each of the orphans. For most of them, it was a second time around. Luxembourg children traditionally receive their gifts from St. Nicholas on Dec. 6.

As the children left, the noted American party-giver said:

"I have never seen so many people enjoying themselves at one of my parties before."

Robbers Grab Shirt, Owner Grabs Suspect

Liburt Coursey, of Alpharetta, is a firm believer in helping himself before calling upon others for aid.

Coursey arrived in Atlanta Monday and was walking along Central Ave. at Trinity Ave. when two strangers stopped him to ask for a cigarette. One yanked open Coursey's suitcase, took out a shirt, peeled off his own shirt and donned Coursey's.

The second stranger offered Coursey a drink of after-shaving lotion. Coursey indignantly flung the bottle against the sidewalk. The stranger struck at him, grabbed up two pairs of trousers from the suitcase and fled.

Coursey went to the home of a son, James W. Coursey. Together they set out searching. A short time later they observed one of the men on Central Ave. near where the robbery took place, the elder Coursey told police later. The Courseys seized the man and yelled for a trolley supervisor to call police.

Dets. W. S. Acree and B. G. Holland said the man, listed as J. C. Browning, 32, of Summerville, was wearing a shirt identified by laundry marks as the property of the elder Coursey. Browning was jailed for disorderly conduct-robbery.

Transport, Phone Men Find Yule Holiday Busy

Christmas, 1950, took on the aspects of the hustle and bustle of the late war years as transportation and telephone officials reported the greatest traffic "since 1945." But, train and plane schedules were snarled and hundreds of telephone workers were forced to forego their Yule holiday in order to handle the long distance calls.

Meanwhile, at service posts in and around Atlanta the holiday was celebrated in a quiet manner, with leaves prevailing at the Atlanta Naval Air Station and at Third Army Headquarters. Atlanta Ordnance Depot's 1,600 transient personnel "stayed on post" where wives and families were feted at a special turkey dinner.

Greyhound Bus Company officials reported travel over the weekend "looked like the busy days of the war," with almost every bus carrying standees out of the terminal in spite of the fact that more equipment now is in service than ever before in history.

"It must be because of the great number of service men on leave," a bus company spokesman said. "We're running everything we have and still that is not enough to accommodate the crowds."

The same transportation situation prevailed at the Terminal Station. H. B. Seigel, station manager, said: "Travel on trains is heaviest it has been for past six years."

A waiting list on all flights was reported by the major airlines, which also have added new equipment since the war.

Spokesmen at Southern Bell Telephone Company said workers handled the greatest number of long distance calls to military and naval installations since World War II ended. C. J. Tucker, Jr., Atlanta district manager, said 968 traffic department people gave up their holiday to handle the increased number of calls on Christmas Day.

Men who stayed on deck at the Atlanta Naval Air Station observed Christmas by staging a Christmas party for 59 underprivileged children from that area.

The children, many of whom live in houses used by armed forces in World War I, were selected by Mayor W. B. Malone of Chamblee and Mayor R. W. Stewart of Doraville. They were treated to a big Christmas dinner, with turkey, ambrosia, pumpkin pie and all the trimmings and later each received a toy, given by the men at the Station.

This party for the children has become traditional at the Station since it became a Naval Air Reserve post in 1946.

Prisoners in the guard house at Fort McPherson knew it was Christmas because they were served a full Yule menu and were permitted to receive visitors during the afternoon. Otherwise, the Third Army headquarters was quiet, with many men on leave. A party for children there had been staged several days ago.

Clemson Finally Makes Perfection Pay Off

CLEMSON, S. C., Dec. 25—Within a couple of days, Clemson College will go to Florida for the rest of the year and a brief portion of 1951. This is not to be construed as an indication of the kind of wealth that usually lands one in Miami for the season, for Clemson has found football business trying in its pastoral corner of the state.

The Tigers, who struck it rich in material, are going to cash in at the Orange Bowl gate, their third bowl excursion in 11 years. You could hardly say Clemson has been burning up the bowl road. Georgia has been so often that Wallace Butts is known as "the bowl coach." Oklahoma now maintains Winter quarters in New Orleans. The Rose Bowl is reserved for Midwestern teams that lose three games.

Clemson, on the other hand, has worked at the business. Only perfection has been required to get the Tigers an invite from their wilderness to the metropolitan bowl areas. When the Cotton Bowl was young and foolish, Clemson was asked to Dallas in 1939 after losing only to Tulane by a point. They couldn't get a tumble from big-bowl interests after a perfect '48 campaign, finally landed in the Gator Bowl. They haven't lost either year, beat Boston College in Dallas and Missouri in Jacksonville.

In an improved bargaining position this year, though tied by South Carolina, they were second to Oklahoma on the shopping list of both the Sugar and Orange Bowls.

They got the Orange Bowl, and the event was marked then by interment of a hatchet. You see, after the perfect '48 season, the Miami folks gave Clemson the Hialeah laugh: "Too dull," they said, accepting thrice-whipped Texas.

What Coach Frank Howard said in answer had something to do with "drowning in orange juice." Now they're both happy with one another. Except, uh, do you know where a fellow might get a couple of tickets?

Couldn't They Sit On the Bench?

"We got 7,500 tickets to sell to our folks," Frank says, "but the demand has been terrific. I'm taking my two children down with me, but they can't see the game. I had to sell their tickets."

This heart-warming display of loyalty has been limited to the Clemson precinct, however. The Tigers' furrow in the bowl field has been rocky. True, Clemson went to the Cotton Bowl, but at that time the Dallas event was a mere seedling. The guarantee was $15,000, for which you couldn't get William away from Mary these days. Last year, North Carolina went to Dallas for $15,000.

"It's because of the name of the school, because we're stuck out here in the country and because we haven't got a local newspaper to build us up like the big city schools," Howard says. "I guess these city slickers figure we'd move to town if were so danged hot."

Perhaps the distant Northerners and Easterners may think of the school as the offspring of a mountaineer named Clem. They don't know that it is South Carolina's agricultural and mechanical college, whose campus is tied up with a chapter of the state's glorious history. Thomas G. Clemson, son-in-law of John C. Calhoun, willed his father-in-law's vast estate to South Carolina for a college site and it was accepted in November of 1889. It's the Texas A. & M., the Mississippi State, the Michigan State of South Carolina.

The town of Clemson is the college. Without it, there would be nothing here but a couple of filling stations, a grocery store, a drug store, a cafe and a dime store. And they wouldn't be in business long without the trade from picturesque campus across the highway.

A trip to Missouri first showed Howard that he might have a football team this season. That day he shocked the Midwest, stomped the Tigers 35-0 and removed forever from his mind the embryonic idea of switching from his single wing to Don Faurot's split T. He also found he could use the two-team system that day.

"We were ahead 14-0," he says, "and I decided to find out how I stood at tackle and end. I knew we had good offensive and defensive men at center and guard. I put in my second-string tackles on defense and a second-string end and a halfback who didn't have a scholarship at ends. It worked and we had two platoons.

"Most people say this is a better team than we had in '48. I can't say. We got more boys playing, if that means anything. We didn't use but about 15 men in '48, I mean for the bulk of the work. We use from 23 to 44 now. We just found men coming through we weren't sure about, Jack Mooneyhan, Dick Gillespie, Bob Hudson, Billy Grigsby and Glenn Smith in the line. We think Dick Hendley ought to win the Southern Conference blocking trophy. We don't think there's a better linebacker anywhere than Wyndie Wyndham.

Big Men From Little Towns

"Now here's where not having a daily paper hurt us. Fred Cone's an All-American fullback, but we didn't have a local paper to pump him up. That Missouri game made us. We found out how tough we were that day. We never had but two close games all season, South Carolina and Wake Forest. We played Wake Forest without Cone and Ray Mathews after the first quarter. If we'd had 'em, we'd have won by 40 points. The boys we put in for 'em did a good job, but where they went six yards, Cone and Mathews would have gone 60."

This Clemson team is a product becoming the campus, big men from little towns. For example, Cone and Wyndham came off six-man teams at Elmore, Ala., and Moncks Corner, S. C. Rookie flash Billy Hair comes from Walterboro, S. C.; Grigsby from Saluda, S. C.; Bob Patton, a stout tackle, from Gray Court, S. C., and Jim Shirley, Cone's stand-in, from nine miles away at Seneca. Strange, there are only two Georgians on this squad, Al Willis, of Gainesville, and Joe Bryant, of Savannah, both reserves.

One of the backfield reserves is Pooley Hubert, Jr., who was sent here to play for the man who coached his dad 25 years ago at Alabama, Russ Cohen. Russ settled here a few seasons back to be near his farm across the line near Waynesboro.

The Hubert boy figured in a tragedy that struck this season. He and a teammate, End Bob Vite, were in a motorcycle crackup on the way home after the state fair game with USC. Vite was killed but young Hubert got out with injuries.

You find this fellow Howard no camouflage artist. He calls 'em as he sees 'em. "We found out from the movies Miami was a better ball club than we first thought. Now I don't know if they can beat us, or if we can beat them.

"I can say this. We ain't going to Miami to get beat," with which he picked up his gun, whistled to his dog and set out through the open field.

Ezzard Charles Named 'Fighter of the Year'

By JACK HAND

NEW YORK, Dec. 25—(AP)—Heavyweight Champion Ezzard Charles has been named "fighter of the year" by Nat Fleischer, editor of Ring Magazine.

Fleischer gave Charles the nod over welterweight champion Sugar Ray Robinson who was honored with a special citation as "best all-around fighter" in any division.

Fleischer wrote that he placed Robinson second to Charles "because the sum total of his influence on the boxing situation was not equal to that represented by Charles' surprisingly easy success against Joe Louis."

Fleischer cited Charles' meritorious war record and sincerity as he pointed out that achievements outside the ring were important factors.

Fleischer listed Louis as the leading contender to Charles despite a "mediocre showing" against Cesar Brion. He said it is possible Louis may be shoved completely out of the picture during 1951.

The Ring editor outlined a four-point program to help U. S. boxing in 1951. Fleischer advised more intelligent and realistic evaluation of the hazards of television. He asked "elimination of all hoodlums and their influence," more intelligent and more liberal matchmaking and encouragement of younger boxers.

Joey Maxim, the light-heavyweight champ, and Robinson both were listed in two divisions. Maxim was placed third among the heavyweight contenders and Robinson was placed right behind champion Jake LaMotta in the middleweight class. Robinson, of course, is recognized as middleweight champ, too, in Pennsylvania.

Fleischer spanked Ike Williams for not defending his lightweight title and moved John L. Davis into the leading contender position. Maxim also was advised to defend his title against either Archie Moore, of St. Louis, or Harry Matthews, of Seattle, Washington.

Ratings:

Heavyweights—champion—Ezzard Charles, Cincinnati; 1. Joe Louis, Detroit; 2. Lee Savold, Paterson, N. J.; 3. Joey Maxim, Cleveland.

Light Heavyweights—champion—Joey Maxim, Cleveland; 1. Archie Moore, St. Louis; 2. Harry Mathews, Seattle, Wash.; 3. Bob Murphy, San Diego, Calif.

Welterweights—champion—Ray Robinson, New York; 1. George Costner, Philadelphia; 2. Kid Gavilan, Havana; 3. Billy Graham, New York.

Ho! Hum! Sugar Ray Wins Again

FRANKFORT, Germany, Dec. 25—(U.P.) — Welterweight Champion Ray (Sugar) Robinson knocked out German Middleweight Hans Stretz Monday night in the fifth round of their scheduled 10-round non-title fight to complete a five-bout sweep of European opponents.

A crowd of 8,000, made up largely of cheering GI's from the United States Occupation Army, watched Robinson floor Stretz four times before finishing him with a powerful left to the head in the fifth. The New York 145-pound titleholder won every round.

Stretz showed more courage than skill throughout the bout. He crowded Robinson continually and landed several good punches even though he took terrific punishment and was knocked down at least once in every round but the third.

Even after he was counted out Stretz dazedly tried to get to his feet to continue, but he collapsed to the canvas and it required a pail of cold water to revive him.

The American troops tried to enter the ring to carry Robinson to his dressing room on their shoulders, but police prevented them from doing so. Instead, they lined his route to the shower room and Robinson shook hands with many of them as he passed through the milling crowd.

This was Robinson's last bout before meeting Jake LaMotta for the World Middleweight Championship at Chicago, Feb. 14. The victory also was his 18th of the year.

In his four previous European fights, Robinson stopped Jean Stock of France in two rounds at Paris, Nov. 27; knocked out Luc van Dam of Holland in the fourth round at Brussels, Dec. 9; outpointed Jean Walczak of France in a 10-round bout at Geneva, Switzerland, Dec. 16, and stopped Robert Villemain of France in the ninth round at Paris, last Friday night.

SAFER, AND SENSATIONAL

SEC Grid Chiefs Favor Return To 'Fair Catch'

By EDWIN POPE

College football, at least in our belt, is getting smart twice on the same punt.

Latest step in the direction of wisdom is the opinion of most Southeastern Conference chiefs that the game should return to the old fair-catch rule.

You don't fair-catch now, bub. You just catch that kick, and try to run, and then try to dig your way out from a ton of bricks.

Overwhelming SEC majority feels that a return to the old regulation would not only promote greater safety but provide fans once again with one of football's tingling sequences—the long punt return.

Hollering to rescind the new-fangled ordinance are Tech's Bobby Dodd, Georgia's Wallace Butts, Mississippi's Johnny Vaught, Tennessee's Bob Neyland, LSU's Gus Tinsley, Auburn's Earl Brown and officials' head George Gardner.

Dissenting voices are Kentucky's Paul Bryant and Tulane's Henry Frnka. They say let the thing be, but they are outvoted 7-2.

Not that the "vote" will change the rule. That has to be done at the NCAA meeting in New York in January, and it well may be.

"No one likes to see a punt roll," argues Neyland. "And that's what is happening. Punters are sending the ball short and high. They know they can get a lot of tacklers downfield by the time the safety man fields the ball. They can lower the boom, and stand a fair chance of getting a fumble.

Neyland

"Give the safety man a chance."

Butts describes the possibility of injury under the present rule.

Tinsley straight-forwardly says he wants the rule in its old fashion "because of the ever-present danger of a boy getting seriously injured watching the ball and not being able to protect himself against oncoming tacklers."

"That is what we all should be interested in at all times," says Gus.

Bryant disagrees:

"Let's keep the rule. Good safety men never used the fair catch. The rule has brought the punt back into the fields from the old out-of-bounds boots."

Looks like the upstretched arms of the punt receiver, or the field's length return of a booming kick, are rolling back as fact.

SPORTS IN BRIEF

East Loses Ragazzo But Curtis Glitters

Condensed from Constitution Wire Reports

A couple of Southerners collided in pre East-West game workouts at San Francisco on Christmas Day. Vito Ragazzo, pass-receiving ace from William & Mary, was lost temporarily to the East with a bruised chest.

His co-bumper was Jake Rowden, Maryland center.

Vandy's Bucky Curtis, Gainesville, Ga., native, was hailed as the star of the day's drills. He grabbed everything thrown near him by Dartmouth Quarterback John Clayton.

Washington and Lee worked toward the Gator Bowl without regular end Bob Goldsmith, out with a shoulder separation.

And Salad Bowl officials pointed out that the clash between Arizona State and Miami (Ohio) holds plenty of fireworks. The Tempe Sun Devils led the nation in total offense. Redskins were close behind, with a 416.3-yard average per game.

Morris Harvey's football team arrived in Tampa for the Jan. 1 Tangerine Bowl game against Emory & Henry.

Los Angeles Rams, losers to Cleveland in the pro title game Sunday, had their grief assuaged somewhat with cash — $686.42 each. The Browns collected $1,113.16 apiece.

Brown Coach Paul Brown killed rumors by announcing "I haven't been contacted relative to the Minnesota (coaching) job," and added that he doesn't expect to be. Friends believe he at least would discuss any offer from Ohio State, where he formerly coached, and where Wes Fesler recently resigned.

Little Willie Shoemaker had a Christmas party of his own at the Fair Grounds in New Orleans. He rode four winners in eight mounts to boost his total winners to 371—just two behind Joe Culmone, nation's leading jockey. Culmone rode two winners in five mounts at Miami's Tropical Park. He needs only 11 more winners to tie the all-time mark of Walt Miller, 1906.

The Fourth Annual Orange Bowl Junior Tennis championships open at Miami Beach Tuesday.

At Fort Lauderdale, Eastern swimmers try again to defeat the West in International Men's Collegiate Aquatic Forum. The East has never won in 13 years of competition.

Tide's Ivey Hurt, May Miss Meet

OKLAHOMA CITY, Dec. 25—(AP)—Alabama basketball Coach Floyd Burdette said Monday night his ace defensive forward, Bryant Ivey, probably won't see action in the All-College Tournament starting here Wednesday.

Ivey reinjured a knee in the San Antonio Invitational Tournament last week. Burdette said Ivey might be able to play if Alabama reaches the finals.

Alabama will meet Oklahoma City University in first-round play Wednesday night. The other night game pits Oklahoma A. and M. against Baylor. In afternoon rounds, Arkansas plays Tulsa and Vanderbilt meets Texas.

Ga. Tech's Hosch Enters Hospital

E. J. (Chick) Hosch, sports publicity director at Georgia Tech and former Associated Press sports writer, will enter Ponce de Leon Infirmary Tuesday for an eye operation.

Chick is expected to be in the hospital from 10 days to two weeks.

Davidson's Last-Minute Buck Nets Rebels 14-9 Shrine Win

Southern Eleven Rides To Victory on Sharp Ford Throws

By CHARLIE ROBERTS

MIAMI, Dec. 25—Dean Davidson and C. P. Youmans, a couple of hometown boys, joined with South Carolinian Bishop Strickland to do a hurried rewrite job on the script in the third annual Mahi Shrine college all-star football game before 39,132 fans in the Orange Bowl on Christmas night.

Those three, along with Georgia Tech's two Bobs—Bossons and North—turned almost certain defeat into a 14-9 victory in the final minute of play with as sensational performances as this historic bowl has known.

Bossons started it all with a great diving pass catch that set precedent in that it was the first interception of an aerial thrown By Pennsylvania's Reds Bagnell this season. North kept the rally that produced a winning touchdown with some great clutch running.

Strickland, South Carolina halfback, grabbed the big laurels in the fading seconds by producing the score itself. Youmans, now of Duke but a Miami Beach star of old, made a sensational catch of a 29-yard Strickland pass to put the ball five yards shy of goal, and Davidson, Vanderbilt ace by way of Miami High, smashed the final three yards for the tally.

It was that great climax that gave the charges of Miami's Andy Gustafson and Georgia Tech's Bobby Dodd the rubber triumph in the three-year series with Herman Hickman's Yankees, and it put a great third quarter rally produced by Army's untamed three of Jimmy Cain, Jack Martin and Gil Stephenson, of Columbus, Ga., in the background.

The underdog Southerners had heavy-handed advantage all through the first half. The Rebels received the opening kickoff and couldn't gain, but Northwestern's John Miller fumbled Pat Field's first punt and Georgia's Bill Bradshaw coiled around it for the South at the North 43. The Rebs drove from there to pay dirt on ten plays including three bullet passes that netted 23 yards.

John Dottley, Ole Miss' battering ram, Kansas' Wade Stinson and Georgia Tech's Bobby North slashed the line for the rest of the yardage. Ford's eight and 12-yard flings to Bill Stribling, of Ole Miss, and Duke's Ceep Youmans were the big gainers. Ford sneaked two yards to the one, and Dottley battered over. Field's extra-point boot was wide and it was 6-0.

Before the first quarter ended, Tisdale's passes to Pfeifer sparked the North's one big first-half drive. The surge petered out 14 yards shy, however, and the South consumed much of the second stanza banging 81 yards on 17 plays to the North's one. There, Ohio State's Bob Momsen held Ford for no gain on a sneak and the North took control.

The reprieve was short-lived. The Yanks gambled as they tried to batter their way out of trouble, and James Staton, 240-pound Wake Forest tackle, smashed Lehigh's Dick Gabriel in the end zone for a safety and the 8-0 margin.

Gil Stephenson's slashing runs and Dick Doheny's aerial bursts to that same operator and Pfeifer moved the Yanks to the Rebs' 35 as the intermission buzzer then sounded.

The resurgent Northerners came back on the running of Army's backfield triumverate to take a 9-8 lead before the next quarter was history. Field, having a terrible night, tried to punt midway the period when the scrimmage line was at the South's 26, James Janosek, Purdue guard, put his brawny chest against the boot. The ball bounded clear out of the end zone for a safety, and the South was in charge only 8-2.

It was late in the quarter when Bagnell ran back a Davidson punt 18 yards to the South 33 to set up the Yanks' TD. Tisdale's eight-yard pass to Martin and short line bursts by Martin, Cain and Stephenson put the ball across. Martin jammed eight, then one for the final. Drake's Dick Steere converted from placement and the North was in the saddle, 9-8.

With only six minutes to go, Bossons made his great diving interception of Bagnell's throw at the North 37. That put the shoe on the other foot. Bobby North, running like a thing possessed, rammed 18 of the necessary 36 yards on four totes. Louisville's Tom Lucia rammed for eight on two carries and Ford found Missouri's Gene Ackermann for nine yards to keep the thrust alive. Davidson replaced North and failed to make the final yard and the Yanks took over with four minutes remaining.

Taseff punted out but Stinson fumbled after taking a Strickland aerial and the North recovered on its own 16.

The Rebs forced another kick that went out of bounds at their own 44. Strickland threw long. Youmans made a sensational grab at the North five for a 29-yard gain. Ford skirted end for three, and Davidson pounded across the double stripes. Pennsylvania's Herb Agocs blocked Field's extra point try, but only 45 seconds remained and the South had it at 14-9.

Michigan and Texas Bowl Game Choices

LOS ANGELES, Calif., Dec. 25—Taking the four major bowl games in order, it might be just as well to open with the two that can be the closest. These are the Rose and Cotton bowls at Pasadena and Dallas. California, facing Michigan, is depending largely on a strong defensive line, a fine backer-up named Richter and three better-than-average backs.

This is California's third shot at the oldest of the bowls and Lynn Waldorf believes this will be his best bowl team. California is a good team but in no sense a great one as its showing against Southern California, San Francisco U. and Stanford has proved.

Michigan hasn't as much line strength as California carries but in Ortmann, Dufek and Koceski the Wolverines have the more dangerous backs. Ortmann can not only run with the best of the Bears, but he can outpass their best passer by some 80 percent.

Ortmann is a brilliant back and in better physical condition certainly belongs in the All-America class. Injuries cut both Ortmann and Koceski down in more than one big Michigan contest. Dufek is among the best fullbacks in the country.

Lack of a passer has crippled California badly in her last two bowl stands against Northwestern and Ohio. State. While Waldorf has a fair passing attack this season, it doesn't compare with Michigan's control of the air route. Michigan was a trifle too thin last fall, but it had class with its best men ready. Michigan has had time enough since her final game to get back in shape and I believe will have too many guns for her Califronia rival.

It might be said that you can't keep on beating California's unbeaten team forever and that California is overdue. In my scrambled book Ortmann will be the decisive factor.

This Rose Bowl affair rates a close, bitterly fought afternoon with Michigan out to keep her Rose Bowl effort clean—and California even more determined to end her Bowl defeats. I think that Michigan has the better team.

Texas and Tennessee

I have just left the widespread borders of Texas where no one believes that any team in the country belongs with the Cherry-Price outfit. They tell you that Texas was and still is two touchdowns better than Oklahoma, the team that beat Texas 14 to 13.

You must agree with these Texans that Texas is one whale of a football team. But I also believe they have slightly underrated a coach by the name of General Robert Neyland, one of the best coaches football ever knew.

This Cotton Bowl game should be largely a battle of two great lines—possibly the two best lines in the country. They have two All-American guards as a starter. They are better on defense. Any ground made in this Cotton Bowl clash will be dearly earned.

There is a chance this Cotton Bowl game may not be as spectacular as some of the other Bowls. For the spectacular side too often belongs to the offense. The offensive side of football can get a rough test in this party at Dallas.

Both Texas and Tennessee have good running and passing attacks, but nothing exceptional. Texas has a fine back in hard-hitting Townsend and Tennessee has a dangerous back in Lauricella, who can pass and run.

In the first Bowl roundup, I am picking Michigan and Texas. Both games should be extremely close—and both are sure to be fought out to the closing play. I believe Tennessee has a better chance to beat Texas than California has of beating Michigan.

THE CRACKER YEAR

Most Colorful Club Won Flag

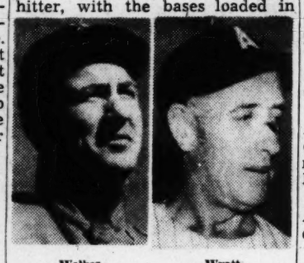
By JESSE OUTLAR

Dixie Walker's 1950 Crackers were called the most colorful club in Atlanta baseball annals by many observers. Stamped by experts as a solid choice for the second division, they provided countless thrills for Ponce de Leon patrons in their drive to Atlanta's 13th pennant.

Fans won't forget the smooth rhythm of rookie Ed Mathews' swing, Ole Hugh Casey trudging from the bullpen in his inimitable stride, big Ebba St. Claire's booming bat, Gene Verble, Art Fowler, Charlie Gorin, Ellis Clary and the others.

Coach Whit Wyatt, who hadn't pitched in five years, exemplified the spirit of this professional club with the old college try, when he won the Southern Association All-Star game.

Wyatt's change of pace curve, which registered a third strike on Pat Haggerty, the league's top hitter, with the bases loaded in the first inning and two out, provided the thrill of the year in most books.



Walker Wyatt

There was never a dull moment with a club, which was ready to battle with runs or fists. So let's reminisce, review the highlights at year's end, with occasional reference to the league in general.

Jan. 27—Don Osborn, who led Macon to Sally League flag in 1949, signs to pilot Nashville.

Feb. 11—Sad day for Atlanta fans and baseball in general. Ex-Cracker Manager Ki Ki Cuyler dies of coronary thrombosis in an ambulance en route to Ann Arbor, Mich., hospital.

March 1—Earl Mann signs Whit Wyatt, former Brooklyn ace, as Atlanta coach, first under Mann's regime.

March 2—Hugh Casey signs with Crackers.

March 5—Jim Bagby and Al Hodkey draw releases as 30 Crackers report for Spring training at Pensacola, Fla.

March 6—Ebba St. Claire is hardest worker in camp. Manager Dixie Walker predicts good year for St. Claire.

March 20—Ed Mathews, now in Navy, reports, hits homer off Casey in first time at bat in intra-squad game.

March 30—Rookie Larry Lassalle hurls 6-0 shutout in exhibition against Pels in home town of New Orleans. Paul Pettit, $100,000 bonus boy works three scoreless innings for Pels.

April 13—Crackers maul Newnan in final exhibition game to snap 10-game losing streak.

April 14—A team termed most patched-up and inexperienced in 50 years beats Birmingham, 7-4, in opening game at Ponce de Leon. Only 6,776 brave 34-degree weather as Mathews hits first of 32 homers and Art Fowler wins first of 19 games.

April 17—Hank Ertman acquired from Braves on 24-hour recall, became regular first baseman.

May 15—Atlanta takes over permanent possession of first place as Al Henencheck beats Mobile on four hits.

"OH YOU WONDERFUL SHOE!"—Golden-Toed Lou Groza (center), hugs the shoe that kicked the winning field goal with 45 seconds to go in Sunday's National Football League championship playoff between Cleveland and Los Angeles. Groza booted the ball 16 yards through the uprights for a 30-28 Cleveland Browns victory. Coach Paul Brown is shown at left, while Center Mickey McBride is at the right.

Browns' Comeback Surprised Graham

CLEVELAND, Dec. 25—(AP)—Handsome Otto Graham, who led the Cleveland Browns to the National Football League championship, admitted Monday that he thought their last chance had gone when he fumbled in the final three minutes of play.

"I wanted to crawl into a hole and die," the six-foot-one, 198-pound quarterback said. "I would not have given anything for our chances at that time."

The Browns trailed 28-27 when the ball slipped from Graham's fingers on Los Angeles' 17-yard line. The Browns came back in the last 20 seconds of play to win the contest 30-28 on Lou Groza's field goal.

Graham has been the Browns' outstanding player since the team was organized in the All-America Conference in 1946. He connected Sunday with 22 of 33 aerials for 298 yards and four touchdowns.

"Boy, what a great team those Rams are," he said. "I wouldn't want to play them very often. I can assure you of that. They were definitely up for the game and had a tremendous desire to win."

"Automatic Otto" also had high praise for his passing rival, Bob Waterfield, who completed 18 of 31 passes for 312 yards and one touchdown.

Although the match was played in 29-degree temperature with a 28-mile wind blowing across Cleveland Stadium, Otto doesn't think the weather had too much effect.

"Of course we couldn't cut as well in running because the ground was hard," he explained. "When we warmed up I thought the wind was going to make passing pretty difficult, but it didn't seem to. I saw just a few of the passes wobble. Perhaps it was just concentration."

It was Otto who made a short run to the right to place the ball in front of the goal posts for Groza's winning field goal. From the 16-yard line.

He said that although the Browns might have attempted a touchdown, there was no thought of it.

And was he nervous about again fumbling as he ran the ball to set up the goal? "There wasn't time to get nervous," he laughed. "Only the spectators can get nervous."

Groza said he felt the same way when he made the kick.

"I was just thinking of fundamentals," he told reporters. "I was going over in my mind what to do. I didn't want to make any mistakes."

Coach Paul Brown of the Browns calls Groza the "best placekicker in the world" and he modestly takes no credit for his skill.

Pug Worn To Nub, Gives Up

Special to The New York Times and The Atlanta Constitution

NEW YORK, Dec. 25—Frankie Neve, veteran of 200 ring fights, took his worst licking Christmas Eve from a four-month-old infant who wore him down to a frazzle in a night-long engagement.

Wearing blue trunks, weighing sixteen pounds, and hailing from Terry McGovern's old South Brooklyn bailiwick, Kid Barker first met his opponent at 7 o'clock on Christmas Eve. Neve was then walking along Atlantic Avenue with a lady friend. The child's mother, a friend of the lady friend, offered $5 if Neve would mind the child until midnight.

The ex-fighter, who campaigned in the late '20's as a lightweight, took the infant to his four-room flat. On the way he checked the diaper supply and laid in a few cans of evaporated milk, according to the mother's instructions.

"From there on in, it's a contest," the 45-year-old ex-pugilist said Monday. "I got maybe 110 pounds the best of it in the weights, but that don't help me. This kid is no sucker for that evaporated milk. When I try to feed him, he coughs. That gets me worried. Next thing, he runs out of diapers.

"Midnight comes, but his mother doesn't show up. In my time I fight over 200 fights. I fight guys like Petey Herman and Tony Canzoneri and I do pretty good. But I can't figure out this kid's style.

"I try to rock him and he gives me the clinch. I try to out-fox him, but he's way ahead of me. And boy, does he fight that bottle! He knows that ain't on the up-and-up. I get him flat on his back, but what happens? He gets up."

By eight o'clock Monday morning the old-time fighter was ready to call it quits. He bundled the child up warmly and took him around to the Butler Street Police station.

An Investigation Is In Order

When the General Assembly convenes a few days hence it might well inquire into the reasons why its instructions for bringing the Department of Education and the Department of Revenue under the Merit System have not been carried out.

The General Assembly voted nearly a year ago to place these two departments under provisions of the Merit System. There have been lengthy surveys for the purpose of establishing job classifications and salary schedules. Recommendations have been turned over to the department heads for study and comment but at the last report they had not been returned.

It is our understanding that Dr. M. D. Collins, State School Superintendent, is eager for the Merit System to become operative but some board members are not. There also are reports there are some high officials of the Revenue Department who want a postponement until after a sales tax, expected to be voted at the coming session, goes into effect. Administration of a sales tax would, according to reliable estimates, require approximately 150 more employees in the Revenue Department. Delaying application of the Merit System until these employees are hired would permit employment on a basis of politics rather than ability and would have the effect of freezing political appointees into jobs.

In some respects Gov. Talmadge has done more for the Merit System than any other Georgia Governor. It has been extended under his administration so that nearly all employees are covered. But the delay in bringing the Education and Revenue departments under the plan, plus the Governor's reappointment last week of R. M. Walker as a member of the Merit Board, is cause for wonder if the Governor is seeking a Merit System in name only.

Mr. Walker too frequently follows the leadership on the Board of Stanley Brooks, who was involved in the Telfair tombstone vote count several years ago. Because Mr. Walker virtually always votes along with him, Mr. Brooks has almost complete control over Board actions. The third member, Cook Barwick, is an independent—though a close personal friend of the Governor—who does what he can to make the Merit System operate as it was designed to do.

There also are reports that the Merit System itself is being flouted in some departments—with the co-operation of a member of the Board.

Atty. Gen. Cook has ruled that these departments have been under the Merit System since early in the year, and that any employe might bring his department under the act by petitioning the courts for writ of mandamus.

We do not believe the Legislature intended that the Merit System be merely a facade for political manipulation. The Governor himself has pushed the Merit System at every opportunity. It might be he is not fully aware of the devious steps being taken to circumvent some of its provisions. But there are numerous signs now that the Merit System is not working as it should. A legislative investigation, supported by the Governor, would seem in order.

Is Mr. McGrath Being Too Strict?

We have contended from the first that the McCarran anti-Communist law, passed over the President's veto, is too broad. It permits real Communists to delay prosecution for years but is a danger to patriots who might become the target of vicious, unfounded charges.

Nevertheless, there ought to be investigation of the charges, made by both the State Department and Sen. McCarran, that Atty. Gen. McGrath is interpreting the law too strictly. The Senator and the State Department have made public letters to the Attorney General asserting Congress never intended for him to exclude from this country all persons who have ever belonged to any totalitarian party or front organization.

Many immigrants and would-be visitors have been barred from the country on the charge that they belonged to totalitarian organizations in their youth or by coercion. Some war brides have been affected by the policy. Such instances have held the law up to ridicule.

Whether Mr. McGrath is right or wrong his interpretation points up the fact that the law ought to be amended and its vague provisions made clear beyond doubt. However, if the Attorney General is insisting upon absurdly strict enforcement of the law in order to force Congress to amend it corrective steps should be taken.

Europe Is Worth The Risk Involved

What we have been trying to say all along is that while the assistance of free Europe is well worth the risk involved it would be foolish not to recognize the danger of failure there and be prepared for an alternate course.

That is why we did not rush in to label Mr. Hoover's recent foreign policy speech "isolationist." Mr. Hoover's plan was predicated on the premise the situation in Western Europe is irretrievable. We do not believe it is, but it would be wishful thinking to act upon the assumption that adequate defense in Western Europe is a certainty.

We were encouraged by Secretary of State Acheson's disclosure the other day that the National Security Council has considered, but rejected, practically the same suggestions made by Mr. Hoover. The Council, then, is aware of the dangers involved. It is not ready yet, and wisely we think, to write off the continent of Europe.

If the European will to resist can be rejuvenated and rearmament speeded the Western countries can build a formidable force which might deter or defeat Soviet aggression. Western Europe's 315,000,000 people and vast industrial capacity would be mighty factors on our side. If they go to Russia the industrial potential alone easily could be sufficient to enable the Soviets eventually to overwhelm this country, too.

The fault with Mr. Hoover and those who accept his doctrine without reservation is that they are willing to believe without further ado the situation in Western Europe is hopeless. Extremists on the other side refuse to admit anything but success is possible.

As yet, neither is the case. There is still a slim hope of full co-operation. As long as the issue is in doubt it is imperative we do everything possible to generate enthusiasm for resistance to communism. If we fail then will be the time to draw in our defense perimeter.

An Absurdity

(Macon Telegraph)

Sen. Harold Willingham, of Marietta, said last week that Georgia could raise $15,000,000 in additional revenue by dropping one exemption from the State's income tax law.

Mr. Willingham, the new Chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, said this could be accomplished by disallowing the exemption from State income tax of the money paid on Federal income tax and lowering some personal exemptions.

Most of us remember the long fight that was necessary to secure this common exemption and we do not believe that the people of Georgia would be in favor of its repeal. The sales tax may not meet with universal favor, but we believe it would have much stronger indorsement than repeal of the provision which permits the deduction of Federal income tax payments from our State income tax returns.

The principal basis for this attitude is that anything else would mean a tax on taxes, which is an absurdity on its face. Every Georgian, in one form or another, is now compelled to pay heavy taxes to carry on the Federal Government and these taxes admittedly will be increasing in the near future.

The very idea that we had to pay taxes to the State on money which we have already contributed to the Federal Government does not make sense.

One Weakness

(Gainesville Times)

One of the most important bills scheduled to be introduced in the January session of the Georgia General Assembly is the one providing for a uniform traffic code. The measure, being prepared by a committee headed by Gainesville's Rep. Howard Overby, is aimed primarily toward bringing the State's traffic laws nearer in line with those of other states in the nation, with the eventual goal of a uniform code from coast to coast.

Cursory study of the measure indicates that the measure, if enforced, will go far in reducing death, injury and property damage on our roads and highways.

However, there is one glaring weak point in the bill. The committee so far has failed to include provisions for automatic jail sentences for second and third drunk offenders.

The person who habitually endangers lives and property by driving while under the influence of alcohol is guilty of criminal negligence and disregard for the safety of others. The law should recognize him and treat him as such.

Song of The Morning After

(Reprinted by request of the Hon. Peter J. Frink.)

'Tis the day after Christmas and all through the jernt
The rugs are a-litter with cigarettes burnt;
There are crumbs on the mantel, toys on the floor,
A wilted brown wreath hangs limp on the door.

And there in the corner, a sad sight to see,
The drooping remains of a tired Christmas tree
Is shedding its tinsel and ornaments shattered
In careless abandon as if nothing mattered.

The carols are ended; "Silent Night" has been stilled.
And where, only yesterday, the multitude milled,
No laughter resoundeth, no word is now spoken
. . . But only the silence remaineth unbroken.

There are rings on the table where glasses have set,
A soft spot on the sofa where the baby has been.
The floor is just covered with ribbons and wrappings
And toy trains and fruit cake and Christmas tree trappings.

The lamps are still burning, their shades all awry,
While off in the kitchen are dishes piled high.
Floors have been swept not, the beds are unmade,
It is as a camp spot, where gypsies have stayed.

And where, one may wonder, is the negligent spouse
Whose duty it is to clean up the house?
Why, she who should be sweeping and mopping
Is downtown doing her post-Christmas swapping.

'Campaign Talk' Curb Proposed

WASHINGTON—Most persons will see merit in the proposal by Senator Millard Tydings, Democrat of Maryland, that a man who deliberately engages in "false and deceiving" statements in a campaign for the Senate be denied a seat, if he is elected.

The Maryland Senator, who was defeated in the recent November elections, has filed a complaint on that score with the Senate Campaign Investigating Committee. He has suggested that his successful Republican opponent, Senator-elect John W. Butler, be disqualified on the grounds that he used "scurrilous and untrue" printed matter in the campaign.

In describing examples of Butler campaign literature, Tydings used such words as "deliberate fraud practiced upon the voters of Maryland," "fake," and "false and deceiving statements." Those who followed the bitter Maryland campaign cannot deny that he was, to some extent, a victim of the type of fraud of which he complains.

No better evidence of this is needed than to cite the several speeches made in the state against him by Senator Joe McCarthy, of Wisconsin, whose whole tirade against alleged Communists in the State Department has been based on fraud and deception from the beginning.

But the Tydings complaint was directed more at "McCarthyism" than McCarthy himself. One of the disgraceful acts perpetrated against him was the apparent faking of a photograph of him and Earl Browder, the Communist leader. Tydings charges that this was put together from two separate pictures in the Butler campaign headquarters and then given widespread distribution over the state.

"A candidate for the Senate should be barred from service there," he said, "if he has knowingly and deliberately made false statements in his campaign or used scurrilous and untrue printed matter calculated to deceive the electorate; or if such totally false statements or material were issued by other persons in his behalf, with his knowledge and consent."

He went on to recite that during his tenure of office two Senators-elect (Vare of Pennsylvania and Smith of Illinois) were denied seats because of money frauds in their campaigns. Certainly there is some logic to his point that one such fraud is as bad as the other.

Senator Guy Gillette of Iowa, who is chairman of the committee empowered to investigate corrupt campaign practices, has agreed to go into the Tydings complaint. But whether anything will come of it is a moot question. It would improve the moral tone of Senatorial elections, perhaps, to have a law on the statute books outlawing fraud and deception in election campaigns. It might even set an example for the states to follow in electing their state officers.

But the difficulty of enforcing such a law would probably be its own undoing, since it is not always possible to draw a precise line between the false and the true. One of the problems posed is what degree of falsity would be required to deny a candidate his seat, and who would determine what is true or false?

Under our political system it long has been customary for opposing candidates to engage in a certain amount of distortion, misrepresentation and exaggeration about each other, not to say downright fraud and deceit. The late Wendell L. Willkie made a classical acknowledgement of this when, in an appearance before some Congressional committee, he was questioned about conflicting statements he previously had made in the 1940 Presidential campaign. His reply was something to the effect that, "Oh, that was just campaign talk."

It seems a pity for a man of Senator Tydings' caliber to be made a victim of the campaign frauds against which he complains. But the only remedy is perhaps an enlightened electorate. As faulty as our present system is, it still provides an opportunity for the man abused to give the lie to the false charges hurled at him. More often than not, the public can be relied upon to tell the false from the true.

JEST FOR TODAY

"Comrade," he was asked, "what would you do if you were left two million rubles?"

"I would give one million to the party and keep the other million for myself," he answered.

"Very good, and if you had two houses?"

"I'd give one to the party and keep the other myself."

"Excellent. Now tell me what you would do if you had two pairs of trousers?"

There was a long pause, and then the candidate said, "Comrade, I don't know."

Well, you see, I have two pairs of trousers."

Why a Milk Board?

The Editors: Noticed in Sunday news item that the State Auditor had questioned some of the expense items of Georgia Milk Control Board.

Why does there always seem to be a row some place over actions of the Milk Control Board? The Georgia Milk Board seems to be a mysterious agency. I heard at one place recently the license holders voted an area out of milk shed and a dairyman advertised his lower-priced milk and the Milk Board enjoined him. The dairyman then cross-enjoined the Milk Board and the Milk Board, rather than meet the dairyman in court, offered to settle the matter out of court and withdrew their injunction.

Why a Milk Board anyhow? Aren't the dairymen regulated by the Department of Agriculture and two or three other inspection agencies as well as their own organization? Looks as though the dairymen are regulated into confusion.

The Georgia Milk Board Act was a temporary health measure to begin with and has expired two or three times and will expire again April 1, 1951.

If it is an emergency and temporary health act, why is it not under the Health Department of the State? What has all this confusion that seems to exist got to do with health? The Governor appoints all the board members and its chairman, who are responsible to him only and none of these has been connected with health work. What have prices and licenses to do with health anyhow?

Seems to me if the Legislature would fail to extend the Milk Board Act beyond next April 1, it would be a charitable act both to the dairymen and people of Georgia.

Prompt Attention

The Editors: After reading freshman Rep. Pittard's (Clarke County) statement about the State Department of Veterans' Service, of which Billy Barrett is Director, I wish to state that I have had the honor of working with Billy Barrett and his staff at the Veterans' Administration regional office, Atlanta, and I have always received prompt and courteous attention.

I have worked with Barrett since he has been Director of the State Department of Veterans' Service and I find and have always found that he is always vitally interested in the welfare of Georgia veterans and their families. Since Rep. Pittard is going to do so much for the State of Georgia, according to his stateemnts in the press, our national Government would do well to have this young man in Washington. After he has straightened them out there, just give him two hours in Korea and our troubles will be over.

Stewards of the Soil

The Editors: Your editorial Dec. 18, entitled "The Pastor Has a Practical Mind," was interesting. I am thankful that we have editors that do not always play politics, but are looking for things that people need to read and to know more about. The Constitution is forever doing that in all realms. More power to you.

God foreordained that man should live from the soil. This is still true today. The soil belongs to God and when we conserve soil, we are building that which belongs to God. Too often we hear of country preachers that will not preach anything but a God of wrath and that religion is separate from our body.

We need today more men in our rural churches that will tell us, not that we are wrong and condemned (we know that), but men that will preach God's word and show us how to live, not just in a religious world, but in a world that God created, and man has filled with sin. May God's blessings be upon all men that preach as Brother Garrison does. It is our sacred duty to be stewards of all that God has committed to us and not just of our money.

Pegler a Pygmy?

The Editors: Westbrook Pegler in his "essay" of Dec. 19, is still "slugging it out" with a dead man. On this day it was not the late President Franklin D. Roosevelt. The new target is the late Mr. Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes, Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States from 1902 until 1932, Justice of the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts from 1882 to 1902.

Mr. Pegler infers that Mr. Justice Holmes followed the Communist line and specifically refers to Mr. Justice Holmes as "a cynical and senile brutalitarian", as "this brutal old fake", as "this old scoundrel", as "a vicious influence" and "the God of an evil cult". Not a single fact is set forth by Mr. Pegler in support of such libelous conclusions, which are contradicted by the World Book Encyclopaedia, which (Volume 8, page 3468)) states that Mr. Justice Holmes "became known as the greatest justice of the United States Supreme Court since John Marshall . . ." Mr. Justice Holmes was no coward.

In relationship to Mr. Justice Holmes, Mr. Pegler is an historical pygmy and a pewee. Mr. Pegler's sad exhibition of such gutter sniping is downright disgraceful for the added reason that a dead man cannot sue a columnist for libel even though such columnist be a "scoundrel", a "faker" and a "vicious" member of an "evil cult".

Mr. Pegler is a cunning propagandist and a propagandist is interested in ends and not in means. The propagandist defeats his mission and his cunningness is vitiated if he expressly states his ends.

Mr. Pegler, without expressly stating such ends, is apparently seeking to destroy the effectiveness of a recent biography of Mr. Justice Holmes, written by Catherine Drinker Bowen bearing the title "Yankee from Olympus". It was a best seller. Adapted to the Broadway stage, it was a great hit. It was recently filmed with Louis Calhern in the role of Mr. Justice Holmes.

It is, I understand, about to be released. If such picture follows the biography and the play, and we are informed that it does, the average American, who is interested in keeping the world safe for democracy and in achieving such ends through ethical means, will be more deeply imbued with the democratic spirit, and with the important role of our courts, the last haven of refuge in any democracy.

"Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end." (Isaiah 9:7.)

Gen. George C. Marshall in his address at Fort Benning, Ga., calling for an "enduring system of national defense," discussed the dangers of what he termed "pendulum" thinking.

We are familiar with this type of thought in our own approach to life—this alternate cycle of strength and weakness.

Our divine destiny and call are to steadiness.

Human resources are limited and are subject to unforeseen and perilous strains.

But if our ultimate hope is in God, there can be and must be deep down within us an undisturbable tide that mounts upward and moves us forward toward the divine goal.

KEEP US, STEADFAST, Eternal God our Father—unyielding in conviction, uncompromising in faith, hope, charity.

Courage Is the Word We Seek

WASHINGTON—Herbert Hoover, perhaps unwittingly, has offered a symbol for those among us who, in this hour of national trial, would yield to timidity, pull our oceans up around us, and abandon the leadership of the free nations of the world. This may turn out to be a service. For it draws the issue and opens a debate which, sooner or later, we were obviously bound to have. Familiar, indeed, is the talk about retiring behind our oceans. It is an echo of a dozen and fifteen years ago. The American people, after full debate and soul-searching, refused that route and have followed our present route since—through hot and cold war, through sacrifice, through mountains of appropriations and piles of taxes, and in tracks of blood across the snowy hills of Korea.

It is ventured here that they will hold fast to this route. But this is a good time to have another day of decision, a good time to settle any doubts, once and for all.

Korea has been a reverse, for us and the United Nations. But we have not been heretofore the sort of people to quit after our Bunker Hills, our Long Islands, even our Valley Forges, nor to make terms after our Bull Runs, nor run up the flag after our Pearl Harbors. In the end we have always come, steadfastly, to Yorktown and Appomattox and the decks of the battleship Missouri.

That gallant vessel thunders away at this very moment to symbolize all that, and not only for us but for the union of free nations in the United Nations. The Missouri and all who tend her guns and all those who fought their way to her protection, should be an answer to Mr. Hoover. There is the spirit of our people, the spirit of free men, and the spirit we can inspire in free men everywhere.

Cold analysis and logical diagnosis probably would have recommended other courses during our history rather than doggedly, and against great odds, pursuing our aims and our dream. Mr. Hoover's diagnosis of what we are up against today is accurate enough, and his recommendations very likely are a practical retreat into what some call the "realities." His is perhaps sound sense.

But that is not the American way which is, it may be admitted, a bit zany.

We are in the middle of something during which at no time will we be able to sit down calmly and draw diagrams and lay down postulates. History is a whimsical, slightly daffy lady. Ours is to be a long ordeal to find the way to peace and justice in freedom. We will have to move forward here, withdraw there.

We face two dangers today. One is the danger of being drawn into a general Asian war. The other is the danger that we will not keep up the spirit and will of our allies all over the world to resist aggression. We must tread carefully, maneuvering the best we can.

Of course Mr. Hoover is right that our European allies must help themselves, that we can't expect to defend Europe alone, that we can't send over enough men and material to do the whole job—which is what they have been told very plainly. Nor can we, as Mr. Hoover said, "create their spiritual forces; we cannot buy them with money."

But we can encourage their spiritual forces and the way to do this is through our continued interest and our support in every way that we can afford. Certainly that won't be done by sounding off in majestic tones, like a bragging, self-centered giant, about a "western hemisphere gibraltar of western hemisphere civilization."

Franklin D. Roosevelt once had a much better phrase—"the arsenal of democracy." That came to mean not only an arsenal in its literal sense, but a storehouse of friendship, of spiritual and moral support and sustenance, of our love for freedom. From that we shared what we had wherever it was needed.

Mr. Hoover insisted his was not the way of "appeasement." But there is such a thing as "appeasement" of our own fears and selfishness.

Courage, it would seem, is the word we are seeking.

FRED OTHMAN

What Have They Wrought?

WASHINGTON—You can't blame the Veep, who has to sit directly under the Senate press gallery, from being a little chary about getting buzz-bombed. He still has hair on his head, but not enough to provide protection against missiles from above. This is inside stuff about the news business, but I must report that Vice Pres. Alben W. Barkley in his day has suffered some near misses from ammunition accidentally dropped by the busy scribes above him. Mostly this has involved such weapons as wads of paper and an occasional lead pencil. Once I watched a lady reporter leaning over the rail with an automatic metal pencil in her mouth. A statesmanlike statement startled her, she opened her pretty jaws and the Veep nearly got beaned.

Still another lady one time spilled a paper cup half full of coffee, with cream, over the ledge, but that was a long time ago and I can't even remember who the Vice President was that got splashed. These horrid accidents will happen no more.

The $5,000,000 remodeling of the legislative chambers includes a new Senate press box as designed by some of the leading architects in the country. Here the artistic ones have placed the reporters in such magnificent and comfortable isolation that they cannot even see most of the Senators below.

In front of the authors is a two-ton marble slab nearly three feet wide that effectively cuts off their view. It also protects the Veep.

There is a vice versa to this. The Senators cannot see the correspondents. And how can a lawgiver deliver a proper oration unless he knows the writers are above to take down his deathless words?

The seats of the blindfolded correspondents, I must admit, are super de luxe, big, fat, soft leather stools with sponge rubber stuffing. Only they are so wide and placed so close together in that all-important front row that I predict serious delays in bulletins from the legislative hall. The scribblers simply can't untangle their legs fast enough.

Here, directly over the Veep and separated from him by that chunk of yellow marble, sit the press association gents; two for the United Press, two for the Associated Press, and two for the International News. That makes six stools, but the architects (who never forgot anything) have included a seventh for the Secret Service man in case the President ever visits the Senate. So far he's only done that once.

So the standing committee of correspondents and the embattled architects now are engaged in a battle that would have frightened Michelangelo. The writers want that slab of marble removed; the architects claim that would ruin the harmony of the room. Then, insist the reporters, raise their stools high enough so they can see over it. And also toss out that seventh seat.

The architects are considering this. They believe they could ease each chair up three and one-quarter inches. I hauled myself up that distance and discovered that from the Associated Press' number two seat I could see the Senators in the rear row.

And there's worse to come. The master architects intend to install on the marble slab a large bronze clock, so the Senators can see what time it is. But who can see through a clock? If this timepiece goes up, I predict a job of house-wrecking.

Even if it doesn't, my guess is that this nation is in for the loudest artistic controversy since President Truman tacked his balcony on the back of the White House. Just wait until those Senators see what they have wrought.

The Children Get More Candy Today

In The Lanier County News

In a matter of weeks the General Assembly of Georgia will meet. By far the biggest task for the State's lawmakers and the Talmadge Administration will be finding money for the financing of the Minimum Foundation Program for Education. It will be, of course, the business of the Legislature to appropriate the money and the, we hope, not too unpopular task of the Administration to go into every part of the State and collect the money in line with the directive of the General Assembly.

We have differed occasionally with the Administration in policy and in procedure, but we are wholeheartedly in accord with Governor Talmadge in his opinion that the millions of dollars needed will have to come primarily through a sales tax. Some of it may possibly be realized through otherwise revising the State's tax structure.

The other day we were discussing this business of a sales tax with an acquaintance and he accused us of being hard-hearted and not having the welfare of the poorer classes of people at heart. He informed us that the sales tax would fall hardest upon the people least able to pay it, and that we would literally be taking bread out of the children's mouths. He said that the candy had already been taken out of their mouths.

We informed this person that the thing which we were advocating would keep bread in the children's mouths and put the candy back in them, although we told him that according to our observation and statistics as well that children were now eating more candy than they ever had before.

This gentleman confessed that he was 52 years of age, and we asked him how much candy he got when he was six years old. He admitted that he got candy in limited quantities on Christmas and a stick of candy on the average of once a month in addition to this.

We informed this man that we were around the same age and that our quota of candy when we were six and seven years of age was just about what he said, except that occasionally a month would go by when we would fail to get that stick of candy. We put this question: "Now, how much candy does the average Georgia child get?" He admitted that much more than they did 44 years ago.

We also asked him this question: "What kind of a school lunch would you have when you were six or perhaps eight years old?" He said, "Two biscuits and a cough medicine bottle full of syrup." "Now, how about the school lunches?" we asked. He confessed that was much better nowadays. He remembered about the children getting turkey on special days at the school lunchroom and well-balanced meals every day on which they go to school.

We informed him that we had in mind a family of a veteran who was sick and that the Red Cross was giving this family $10 worth of food each week, and that there were thousands of other cases like this. We cited many cases of families where the bread winner had died or was incapacitated by illness where the Welfare Department had extended its program of assistance into these homes, and that such a thing was unheard of in Georgia a generation ago.

We reminded him of free school books, homestead exemptions, the program of veteran training which is bringing millions of dollars into Georgia each year.

Then he asked us: "What are you getting at?" We informed him that we were just laying the groundwork for the sales tax idea, by reason of the fact that so much money is flowing in at the bottom that a source of state revenue would be possible now that wouldn't have before the time of these benefits to our less fortunate Georgia people.

We told the man that we hated very much for people to have to pay a sales tax, and we also told him that we hated the idea of a person's having to be operated on, but that this would be the only means of curing what was wrong with them.

Good Grasses In Florida

MIAMI, Fla.—There are some remarkable grasses down this way, pangola, Carib, torpedo, Bahia and Rhodes grasses, not to mention Coastal Bermuda, St. Augustine, Napier grass and the old native wire grass. The best yields of beef to date were made on St. Augustine grass. Two thousand pounds of beef to the acre each year for a period of three years were produced from St. Augustine on muck land.

The drawback to St. Augustine is the chinch bug, which attacks the grass when it is dry. Pangola grass seems to be the best all-round grass, growing rapidly and having a long growing season. It is injured by frost, but recovers quickly.

Good in Water Carib is a magnificent grass, likewise, and it has the capacity to live in water for a long time. So does Bahia. This is an important factor, for many of the fields stand in water during the rainy season. Torpedo is frowned upon by the experts, for it spreads its roots underground like Johnson grass (only more so) and makes a growth that would be very hard to get rid of when the land is needed for farming.

However, the same question applies here as with kudzu up our way, "Why should you want to get rid of a good permanent crop?"

There isn't too much Rhodes grass growing down this way, but the patches I saw seemed to withstand the cold better than the other grasses. Coastal Bermuda does well in the irrigated and fertilized farm lands when they have been in vegetables for about three years. The Troup ranch near Indiantown expands its pastures in this way. The land is used for vegetables for three years and by then it is well established in Bermuda.

Little Done Thus far the cattlemen I met have done very little about a sure-fire Winter grass. Dr. Bair, the agronomist, says that rye grass will do well in fields of St. Augustine or Bermuda grass, but that few are using it. Dr. Etheridge Hall planted several acres of K. 31 fescue grass in dry fields and didn't get much response, but he admits he gave it little help.

On the other hand, his Ky. 31 planted near his dairy barn is doing well. I am going to send Joe Adams some Ky. 31 for experimentation purposes. If it will grow here there will be no question about year-round grazing, for their Summer grasses last the year around except during the frost periods. And these are only occasional.

SENATOR SOAPER

Remarks for the Record

THE BIG DOUGH goes to primitive painters; none to the corny poets who got up the rhymes for square-dance calling.

SOMETHING NEW is a bedside memo pad with a lamp attached. It is for those night thoughts that likewise lose their glow in the dawn's cold light.

MOST INTRICATE of all the political arts is criticism, as it has to stop an inch short of making it necessary to put forward an alternative program.

IN THE WEST a disheartened miss finds she can't commit suicide because she's too good a swimmer—which may explain the many troubles that don't drown in beer.

WE KNOW NOT what course others may take, but as for the UN, when last observed, it was making another trip around the bush.

WESTBROOK PEGLER

In the Name of Journalism

NEW YORK—Sen. Joe McCarthy has started an important public service in going after Drew Pearson. He deserves the support of patriotic citizens in a fight which inevitably will be rough and dirty. Pearson is a slippery, devious fellow, absolutely insensitive to the inhibitions of truth and ethics as I intend to prove if he ever brings to trial a suit which he filed for the purpose of muzzling me in my determined campaign to expose him and break his sinister power. In Washington I was solemnly advised to lay off Pearson because he was very powerful and would resort to means that I could never bring myself to employ. The best course for me would be to forget it all and try to win his favor or his forbearance. I learned that Pearson had pipelines into the State Department and elsewhere. Some public officials actually were afraid of him. Others served him as informants, slipping him information which served their vendettas. He had three cabinet members in his network of tipsters.

Adolph Berle, one of those precious happy hot dogs of the Harvard law cult in the State Department, testified before the Committee on Un-American Activities that one of Pearson's "leg-men" was intimate in the State Department and that state secrets were leaking out into Pearson's column.

His "leg-men" included one called David Karr, which was not his real name nor even a legally adopted name, who previously had been on the staff of the Communist Daily Worker. McCarthy implied in his speech on the Senate floor that "Karr" was a member of the Communist Party.

Karr denied this, but the fact remains that Karr admitted on oath that he had written for the Daily Worker. That is enough for me. He is now a vice president of the Weintraub Advertising Agency in New York and in this role handled the Pearson radio account when the Lee Hat Company, of Danbury, Conn., was Pearson's radio sponsor.

During this time, Pearson published the lying statement that the Brooklyn diocese had instructed the clergy to admonish the faithful to boycott Lee hats. Frank Lee had a terrible experience and finally got shed of Pearson, but not until he had suffered a nervous breakdown which put him into a hospital.

He was there at the very time that Drew Pearson, under Lee's financial patronage, was conducting his vicious, lying, motivated campaign against Jim Forrestal and publicly crowing over the fact that this great martyr patriot was under treatment in confinement for a condition similar to Mr. Lee's.

Unwittingly, Frank Lee was paying this blackguard to hound a fellow sufferer with taunting references to his nervous condition and an infamous lie charging Forrestal with cowardice when his wife was being held up by robbers.

Lee later came to my office and poured his heart out. His story revealed a rotten condition which should never have been suffered to develop in radio subject to government control.

Every newspaper which carries Pearson's column is on warning that he is a liar not by accident or honest error but by persistent practice and motive. Furthermore, he is at his best, by the most generous judgment, a bad reporter and the quality of his "writing" is crude and without professional grace.

As have advised you before, Karr went to the late Charlie Ross, President Truman's secretary, and threatened to "blast" Gen. Harry Vaughan on the radio unless Vaughan withdrew his objections to a certain design which Pearson was then promoting. The design was to plant a "leg-man" in false guise on a government mission which was going to Greece, with the further purpose of slipping that "leg-man" into Yugoslavia when that country lay behind the Iron Curtain and Tito was one of Stalin's satellites.

Vaughan stood fast, for, after all, he was only obeying President Truman's orders to prevent Pearson's men from latching onto the government mission. And, in due course, Pearson began to "blast" him. Vaughan then discovered that Madeline Karr, the wife of David Karr, was in the White House as the "correspondent" of an obscure weekly Greek-language paper published in New York. Vaughan saw to it that her White House credentials were revoked. The editor of the Greek paper told me he dispensed with her services because her political view was far to the left of the paper's editorial policy.

I cannot substantiate McCarthy's charge that Pearson conducts his lying campaigns under directions from Moscow, but I do urge those who have confidence in my work and my integrity to resist the campaign to discredit McCarthy and thus to whitewash Pearson.

This anti-McCarthy campaign, begun last Summer, almost cleared Owen Lattimore.

It was only by a brazen act of Lattimore, himself, in selecting Little, Brown, of Boston, to produce his book, "Ordeal by Slander," that McCarthy was vindicated. The editor of that publishing house, Angus Cameron, has a flagrant record of associations in the sort of politics that McCarthy charged to Lattimore. How came Lattimore to do business with Cameron? Was that coincidence?

I bespeak intelligent consideration of McCarthy's charges and of the evidence regarding Pearson, and calm rejection of the smear technique which worked so well for a limited time for Lattimore.

The warning to be afraid of Pearson and let him alone had the opposite effect on me. That lying blackguard is my man, just as Harold Ickes was in his time. Santa Claus brought him to me. Pearson is a liar and a rogue and I will belt him through the skylight as a service to my country and my honorable profession of journalism.

J. H. Ewing, 83, widely known as the "dean of realtors" here, died at his home, 1149 Ponce de Leon Ave., N. E., at 5 p. m. Monday.

Armed with an intimate knowledge of the city through his work as a tax assessor, he participated in developing other important residential sections. His suggestions for city improvements and development were closely followed and many years ago he accurately forecast the major roles several sections of Atlanta would play.

Churchmen Hail Message Of Truman

NEW YORK, Dec. 25—(AP)—The head of the National Council of Churches of Christ in the U. S. A. said Monday President Truman's Chirstmas Eve message will aid in efforts to strengthen the nation's "spiritual foundations."

In a telegram to the President, Council President the Rt. Rev. Henry Knox Sherill said:

"I am sure that your earnest appeal (counseling Americans to pray for peace) will greatly help to reinforce the efforts which the churches are unitedly making to strengthen the spiritual foundations of our national life."

He added that the President's message "will lead many people to observe Dec. 31 as a day of special prayer." The council has called for nationwide prayer on that day.

YULE'S FIREWORKS

Grass Fires Harass Area

Fireworks addicts Monday were blamed for dozens of grass fires which harassed fire and police departments over Atlanta, Fulton and DeKalb counties.

"Just as fast as we can plug in lines we are sending out equipment," a radio dispatcher in the Atlanta Fire Department said. "It's been that way all day long."

The DeKalb Fire Department called upon the Decatur and Avondale departments for help in answering calls. None of the fires was serious.

Atlanta patrolmen booked more than a dozen cases of discharging fireworks in the city. Most of the addicts, they said, were over the 16-year age limit and thus were placed in jail under $50 bond or until they posted $13 collateral.

story that gets a break in the English newspapers."

While the theft generally was believed to be the work of Scottish extremists, the possibility remained that pranksters had removed the stone.

The stone, known to date back at least 1,100 years, measures 26½ by 16½ by 11 inches. A large rectangle is roughly outlined on the top. According to legend the stone groans when a rightful sovereign sits on it, but remains silent beneath a conqueror.

England's Edward I brought the stone to Westminster in 1296 from the old Abbey of Scone in Perthshire, where the ancient Scottish Kings were crowned. Until Monday the only other occasion when the stone was moved from Westminster Abbey was in 1657 when it was taken to Westminster Hall for the installation of Oliver Cromwell as Lord Protector.

For centuries, tourists from Britain and overseas have seen the stone.

From their preliminary investigation police surmised the thieves attended a Christmas Eve service, concealed themselves in one of the royal chapels until the early morning hours and then removed the stone from beneath the throne.

TRUMAN

Mr. Truman and Acheson over some "problems" concerning the latter's department. The press secretary indicated that Acheson had not had the idea of suggesting the President's return until well along in the conversation.

It was not established here whether the Secretary of State called Marshall before he talked to the President. There was some indication, however, that Acheson's call to the President followed his call to Gen. Marshall.

Short said he was not certain which of the two Acheson called first but that Gen. Marshall will certainly be in Washington Tuesday and prepared to attend the meeting.

In saying there was nothing "new or critical" in President Truman's decision of Monday, Short said, "the President has only so much time to pay to all his problems and it was decided that it would be better if he could clean up some of these matters before devoting himself to the State of the Union message and two other messages before Congress convenes in January."

The President, in addition to preparing the State of the Union message, must prepare his economic message and his budget message for the 82nd Congress which convenes Jan. 3. Mr. Truman had intended to devote some time to the State of the Union message during his holiday but his schedule has been so crammed with attendances at special events and with callers that he has not had much time to devote to the project.

The decision to return to Washington came in the midst of the calmest day the President has spent here since reaching his home in nearby Independence Friday.

His only official act came Monday morning when he interrupted the ceremony of opening Christmas presents to acknowledge what he termed "the best Christmas present I've received." He was referring to the completed troop evacuation from Hungnam.

The President directed a member of the White House staff here to send, through Gen. Bradley, his personal thanks to Gen. MacArthur, Vice Adm. C. Turner Joy, Far East naval commander, and Maj. Gen. Edward M. Almond, Tenth Corps commander, and "to all your brave men."

A brand-new air rifle brought Carl Donald Pinnell, 15, of 305 Martin St., S. E., to the Grady emergency clinic with a badly injured right eye. Attendants said the rifle accidentally discharged, the pellet striking Pinnell in an eye.

Mrs. Mirtie Britton, 45, of 1773A South Alvarado Ave., S. W., sustained burns over her entire body when a gas furnace she was attempting to light flared up. Mrs. Cleba Whitten, 29, of Route 2, College Park, was burned about her hands while attempting to rip burning clothing from her small daughter. The child was not hospitalized.

Francis C. Hood, 4419 Wabash, Kansas City, Mo., says that HADACOL has done so much for him to help give him the vitality he now has since he found out his system was deficient in Vitamins B1, B2, Niacin and Iron, that he wants to fill his pick-up truck full of HADACOL and give it to folks suffering from the same deficiencies—so they, too, can be put on the road to feeling better.

This is Mr. Hood's statement: "Before I started taking HADACOL I was very nervous and sleepy all the time. Seems like no matter how much sleep I tried to get, it didn't work—I would just toss and burn all night. Then in the daytime I would be groggy and sleepy—I just felt miserable all the time. It really got me down—I was beside myself in knowing just what to do. Then one day I heard how HADACOL had helped many other folks.

"Now after taking 6 bottles of HADACOL, I get a wonderful night's sleep and never wake up once during the night. I'm not a bit nervous any more either. In fact, right now I feel better than I have ever felt in my life, thanks to HADACOL."

Yes, HADACOL Does Help

thousands of fine folks who were suffering from deficiencies of Vitamins B1, B2, Niacin and Iron. HADACOL is wonderful in the way it builds up the hemoglobin content of your blood (when Iron is needed) to carry these precious Vitamins and Minerals to every organ, and every part of your body. Today, even hundreds of doctors are recommending HADACOL to their patients.

You Owe It to Yourself

. . . to give HADACOL a chance. Refuse substitutes, don't let anyone tell you something else is "just as good." Insist on genuine HADACOL. You risk nothing because HADACOL is sold only on a strict money-back guarantee. You'll feel better with the first few bottles you take or your money back. Trial size only $1.25. Trio of Cookbooks Offer Kitchen Help for All Ages

By AGNES REASOR OLMSTEAD

If yours was a bookless Christmas and if you received some gift money, how about buying a new kitchen book? Three of the most interesting we received were: one an old-fashioned household book, one a key to kitchen economy, and the other strictly for a young daughter.

"The House at Hyde Park" by Clara and Hardy Steeholm (Viking Press, $3.75) is much more than the title implies, It contains the complete text of Sara Delano Roosevelt's Household Book reprinted intact with its wonderful old-time recipes, its cure for croup and prescriptions for furniture polish, and its insights into the daily life of FDR's boyhood.

The authors have reconstructed for us a whole small segment of history. A picture of one family and its way of life; it is also a picture of the comfortable Hudson Valley homes, with their own style, tastes and tempo, around the turn of the century. This is not a cook book but very good reading for those who like such books and those who enjoy the Roosevelt clan. It's a good "plus" book for any homemaker's library.

"Magic Cook Book" written by the food editors of True Story Magazine (Bartholomew House, $2.98) is a book designed to save you money, for its keynote is economy. It is an excellent collection of 1,500 recipes from average homes in every section of the country, all tested by this magazine's competent home economics staff. A great many pages are devoted to low cost dishes, skillet and casserole meals, and simple ways to make low priced cuts of meat appetizing and attractive.

Here, too, are tips on how to buy meat, information on the quantities to buy per serving, facts on nutrition, sick room diets, suggestions for cooking for two, lunchbox ideas, new ways to use package mixes, canning and preserving instructions, table service plus many helpful charts. The entire book is in a simple, easy-to-understand language with step-by-step recipes. If you are looking for a thrifty all-round cookbook, be sure to see this one.

For the little girl who wants a cook book of her own, "Miss B.'s First Cook Book" by Peggy Hoffman (Bobbs-Merrill, $1.75) is the answer. This delightful introduction to cooking is for six to 10-year olds. It has been carefully written to suit the youngest cook's skill, both in handling kitchen tools and in reading.

Miss B. is a real person who thinks it is far more fun to prepare real food she and her friends can eat at once — no waiting-to-age recipes here! The twenty family-size recipes have eye-catching titles: South-of-the-Border Eggs; Dream Doughnuts; He-Man Hamburgers; Gypsies; Whirlwind salad, and Fluff-Duff. All recipes have been tested by children and grownups and checked by home economics authorities and teachers. Mothers who help their daughter with this book will be pleased to see her grow into a confident, helpful small cook.

1950 Leaves Many Homes Much Happier

What was the most significant thing that happened to you in 1950?

According to local women, it was, for the most of them, something that brought more happiness to their home, and to the family group.

"I got married in 1950!" said Mrs. Rodney Cook, 361 10th Street. "Now we're building a house. It's been a wonderful year for us."

"My son Larry took his first step this year," said smiling Mrs. Porterfield Lyles, 890 North Highland. "That was my most significant event."

Mrs. J. W. Stribling, 26 West Andrews Dr., said she would always remember 1950 as the year she realized she was no longer "a young matron.

"Some people just learn the hard way," she smiled, "and it took the third grandbaby to make me realize it."

Mrs. Stribling also listed 1950 as a memorable year "because we got our television set, and I got a new stove, equipped with all the handles, and an oven door that stays closed.

When queried, Mrs. Ed Clapp, 26th Street, answered, "Our baby is coming this March. That's about the most significant thing that happened to us in 1950."

"My husband graduated from Tech this year," Mrs. Traylor Thiesen, 39 Inman Circle, said with a grin, "and we're really on our own now!"

"I'll always remember 1950 because it's the year I was made sponsor for Pi Kappa Phi at Emory," said Peggy Jones, 206 South McDonough Street.

Mrs. Idalia Ferguson, 38 4th Street, who is a dressmaker, declared she would always remember 1950 by "the smiles on the girls' faces when they tried on party or wedding dresses I've made for them. I love to see them happy and know when they wear the dress they'll have a good time. Those smiles are what I live for, and they're the most significant things that have come to me this year."

Enjoying the Middle Years

By HARRY CASEY

When you feel happy, you look happy; and the reverse also is true: if you look happy you feel happy. A mathematician might say it this way: "If x equals y, then y equals x."

This morning, you "got out the wrong side of the bed." You thought you felt grouchy. So your face looked grouchy. But suppose, no matter how you felt, you forced yourself to look pleasant. Suppose you looked at your face in the mirror and grinned, smiled, laughed.

Almost immediately, you discover that when you look pleasant, you somehow begin to feel pleasant. Although this may not be effective with "hangovers," it really will help in less serious early-morning miseries. Anyway, time wasted in groaning can never be regained. And you can't get the most out of life by scowling at it.

People resent their limitations—and the resentment increases with the years. Middle age often shows a high intensity of resentments, hates, prejudices. You may feel you're too tall and want to be shorter; you may be too short and long to be tall. People worry and fret all their lives about the shape of a nose, the color of the hair, or their stoutness or their thinness. Of course this does not refer to chronic invalids or the genuinely afflicted. But those whose troubles are largely imaginary often complain the loudest.

You cannot prevent the birds of sorrow from flying over your head, says a Chinese proverb, but you can prevent them from building nests in your hair. Major Alexander P. de Seversky declares he is wholly sincere in saying: "I owe my career in large measure to the loss of my right leg in the first World War. My disability awakened powers and aptitudes within me which were dormant. The hardest thing to overcome is not a physical disability but the mental condition it induces."

The major smiles at life and obviously finds that life remains rich and exciting.

UNDER MISTLETOE—Ancients believed that only a kiss could break the evil spell of mistletoe, and legend has it that the plant was dwarfed by shame at having been used in making the Cross. Other myths, however, claim mistletoe as a charm against all evil. To the Norse it was a symbol of love and peace, and warriors coming upon a wood of mistletoe laid down arms and made a truce. Peggy Copeland and Ed Kelly think the modern connotation is good.

HAPPY NEW YEAR!—Here's a simple but very effective way to decorate your table for the New Year's Eve watch party. Note the toy balloons give a festive as well as a colorful note to the entire motif.

TIPS ON ENTERTAINING

New Year's Eve Parties At Home Real Fun

By YOLANDE GWIN

Staying at home to ring out the old, and ring in the new? If so, what's the program by way of entertainment?

Whether it's just a family gathering or whether some of the neighbors drop in there can be fun galore for everyone.

Suggest the old tried idea of making the affair a resolution party. Present each guest with a slip of paper with the word "Resolved" written at the top, with the request that a set of six resolutions be written, to be unsigned, but read aloud by the hostess either during supper or right before midnight. A prize could be awarded the person who writes the best resolution following a guessing contest on the real authors.

Quiz programs for the evening's celebration still rate high in popularity. A good one is to write out the dates of twenty or fifty (as 1950 dies, this would be a good number to choose) years back and ask each guest to recall the most important event of that year. Or better still, have them recall their first New Year's Eve celebration. Another quiz could offer opportunities for another type of past events. It's called a Game of the Years.

The hostess provides each guest—by drawing from a hat or basket—a small object. When each guest has either donned what is received or pinned it on, the other guests have to guess what year is represented.

The following examples will illustrate the game:

"A lump of sugar gilded to represent a gold nugget with a pick (from a tiny garden set) glued to it will illustrate 1849—the year of the famous gold rush to California.

A Phrygian cap in tissue paper—the era of our war for national liberties, 1776. A picture of Marie Antoinette with a border of crimson clover—the year of the French Revolution, 1789.

A map of the United States with a scarlet line dividing the North and South. This is the War Between the States in the sixties.

And a bit of fun for the party-minded is the fortune party. Write funny little fortunes for the coming year. Inclose those for the women in envelopes of one shade, and those for the men in another. Then reinclose them in a ball made of several thicknesses of tissue paper with confetti snow and a handful of tiny gilt stars. Attach to the chandelier and let some blindfolded person strike the bag with a walking stick, bringing down the New Year prophecies. Each person takes one envelope and the fortune in it belongs, of course, to him.

Another guessing game is called New Year's Bells. Little cards tied with ribbon from which hang pencils and clusters of wee gilt bells are distributed among the guests. Each card had written on it a set of questions, each riddle to be answered by a word beginning or ending in the syllable "bel." A few illustrations are given here:

A bell of Adam's time? Abel. A bell that blows? Bellows. A bell found in the city of Ireland? Belfast. A bell of bells? Belfry. A bell never peaceful to the ear? Belligerent. A floral bell? Bluebell.

Baby sitters will have many games to choose from should their young charges be tired of their Christmas toys. The nutting game is one. Large chestnuts are hidden through the house in every nook and crannie. Let the children march around in Going to Jerusalem style to music and with an up-to date yell of "Stop the Music" let the small fry start their mad scramble to hunt the nuts.

With the children who like to draw pictures let them stage a two-faced party in honor of Janus, for whom the month of January is named. Let the children draw two faces on cardboard—and form a parade wearing one face in one parade and for the second parade wearing the second. When unmasking time comes let each guess what the other is wearing—if its ghosts, babies, girls, dudes, Hop-along Cassidy, Sambo or others—and then recite "Ring out the old, ring in the new, Ring happy bells across the snow; the year is going, let him go, Ring out the false, ring in true."

But while chimes ring out and whistles blow, many will chose to be on their knees in prayer or meditation, or perhaps sitting silently with their beloved before an open fire. And the music will all be the same—"Auld Lang Syne."

Atlantan Records 77 Years Attendance at One Church

By ANNIE LOU HARDY

It is difficult to say whether Mr. John Ashley Jones is prouder of the Central Presbyterian Church, or whether the church is prouder of Mr. Jones. However, there is no question that each eminently justifies the tribute.

This mutual admiration is the outgrowth of nearly 77 years of association. In fact, Mr. Jones first became affiliated with the church at the tender age of 3, and he has remained to see it grow with the city. He will tell you quickly that it operates the only baby clinic in Atlanta, and that next month, it will complete and dedicate the most beautiful chapel in the city.

Also, he will begin at the beginning and tell you that the church was organized in 1858, and that he has served it under eight ministers and seen it outgrow at least one building. He will also tell you that it is the only Protestant Church of any age in Atlanta that still occupies its original site.

On the other hand, the church would relate how Mr. Jones came toddling into the infant class back in the days when Dr. J. T. Leftwich was minister, how he joined the church at the age of 15, and how he has served as an elder or a deacon since 1930. And it would probably add that his parents, his five sisters and two brothers, his grandparents, and his great-grandmother were also consecrated members of Central Presbyterian.

Nor would the story end there, for Mr. Jones likes to reminisce about his church.

"It was when the First Presbyterian Church stood where the Federal Reserve Bank now stands on Marietta St.," he recalled, "that 30 members, most of whom resided on the south side of the city, petitioned the Presbytery for permission to start a new church, with the stipulation that it NOT be called the Second Presbyterian.

While the first building was being erected on Washington Street, services were held in the City Hall and County Court House, a square brick building with four rooms, on each of two floors, which stood where the State Capitol now stands. The original church had a distinctly Southern air, with a portico and five Colonial columns across the front.

"It is a coincidence that when we outgrew that building," he continued, "we worshipped in the basement of another Fulton County Courthouse at the corner of Hunter and Pryor Sts., while the present church was being erected. It was finished in 1883."

Not that the church has stood still while it continued to occupy the same site—far from it. Its congregation has grown from 30 to more than 1,800 members, many of whom came into the church through contact with the Baby Clinic, which is open to families of all denominations. In addition, it owns a church plant worth half a million dollars.

There are many other things of which the church is inordinately and justifiably proud, not the least of which is its long and fruitful association with Mr. Jones.

LET'S SEE NOW!

'Ain't Nothin' No Trouble . . .'

By DORIS LOCKERMAN

They were packed securely in a Christmas box cushioned in a nest of newspaper shreds, a turquoise plate that had been transformed into a wall plaque with yellow rickrack and a perky little Dutch girl kicking up her heels, and two companion plaques made the same way, with decals and rickrack.

The card said the gift was from a boy, who not long ago was a displaced youngster with a heart condition, and his friend, who could almost now be called his mother because that is the role she has assumed in his life.

The card bore both their signatures, the one round and open, the other strong and purposeful, and reading it, one could envision the planning they had done together, the peaceful, creative changes they had made in the plain little plates to make them artistic and gay, and it was easy to see that here was a gift that had enriched both the giver and the receiver.

It was a gesture, probably multiplied several times in that special little circle that not long ago was the "foster" home chosen for the boy by the Family Service Society. Fashioned in love, it could not have helped strengthening the youngster who a year or so ago was fearful and suspicious of all adults, and badly needed understanding.

I had seen the woman who directed this gift but twice, and both times were hurried exchanges, she propelled by the urgency to get on to help someone who needed it.

Once it was to help a bride, a young refugee girl who had no money, but who wished to marry in dignity and beauty. Somehow her plight had reached the listening ears of this woman who had gone straight to her help. With a practiced eye, she measured her limitations, her capacities and her needs. Then, without delay she telephoned one friend for a wedding gown that could fit a slender waistline, another for a veil, and still another for slippers. She summoned a man she knew to play the organ, and invited his wife to sing, and finally, hurried down to a florist to tell him of her need for a fresh bunch of violets to pin on the white Bible that would be her gift to the wedding couple.

"And it all went off all right," she reported radiantly. "Everything perfect! You never saw such a lovely bride! Cost? Well, I think it may have cost too much, but we will manage. I think we spent about $25 for food and soft drinks for her party, but we will just take it out someplace else!"

This is the woman one meets in many communities, the capacious, expansive, motherly neighbor who is never too busy or too proud to do whatever is needed. She is the one with the seeing eye, and what is more important, the seeing heart.

Like the others of her kind, she herself considers her work lowly and unimportant. To nurse a dying, friendless man is to her a God-given privilege, not a call for attention. To rustle up a box of Christmas for a fatherless brood of children is the least she can do with her overflowing generosity. She has no exact description, no sectionalism, does not fit in any one place alone. She appears everywhere, in all the land, and there is no bounding her usefulness.

Another of her kind paused for breath the other day to deny that she was tired or weary as she hastened on to work for others.

"Me, tired?" She buttoned her coat against the cold, grinned like a girl. "Honey, ain't nothin' no trouble 'less you druther be doin' somethin' else."

Do You Know Who Makes Your Table or Cans Your Food?

By ANNE CAIN

Look around at the foods on your table tonight when you sit down to dinner. Do you have any idea where the vegetables you took out of a can were processed? Do you know where the tablecloth came from? As a matter of fact, have you ever wondered where the table itself came from?

The women of the East Point Woman's Club, with Mrs. Horace Clark, Jr., as president, in studying their goal, "To promote the civic, religious, educational, health and economic welfare of the community," began to wonder not just about their own tables, but about the tables and foods and thousands of other products which the stores in their community sold. Surely, it occurred to them, many of the necessities of life are manufactured in their own state, and should be available in the local stores.

A committee of 10, under the chairmanship of Mrs. Cornelia Dabney Tucker, asked merchants of East Point for lists of all products they carried which were made in Georgia. When the lists were compiled, hundreds of Georgia-made products were included, in all fields of production.

Copies of these lists were then posted in the clubhouse, and with the Chamber of Commerce.

Next, club members were asked to purchase three items from the lists, and report on their packaging, price and quality.

The reports were on the whole favorable, with some evidence of failure to make packaging attractive, and variations in package sizes.

Then, in September, food merchants were asked to allow the women of the club to arrange a display of Georgia-made products. In October, hardware merchants co-operated, and in November, displays were arranged in local furniture stores. Pharmaceuticals were featured in December and plans are laid to offer displays of apparel in January and textiles in February.

When the centers are set up in the stores, marked by a banner of Mrs. Tucker's design, (red, white and blue, with the slogan, "Buy Georgia Products," surrounding an outline of the State), a member of the club is on hand at all times to answer questions and offer information about the production and distribution of the particular products featured.

In many instances, interest in products made locally has encouraged dealers to triple standing orders, and to agree to stock permanently items which had otherwise been handled on consignment.

It is the hope of the club and its officers that the stimulation of interest which their program has evidenced, will spread to other clubs and promote a whole-hearted interest among Georgians in using the goods which their neighbors produce.

THE "ULTRA" POLICY OFFERS COMPLETE PROTECTION ARRANGEMENT

Harrell & Company Makes Coverage Possible to Clients

Harrell & Co.'s 'Ultra' Policy Gives You Widest Coverage

Have you ever wished your insurance could all be put into one policy so you wouldn't have to remember if you were insured for this and not for that? When some valuables disappeared, you would not have to wonder if it were protected . . . you would know. If you damaged a camera or a gun or a piece of furniture, you wouldn't have to call up and ask if you were covered. You would know you were covered. If someone hurt himself on your property, if your dog bit a passer-by, if your luggage vanished while you where on a trip, or you lost some clothing that just turned up missing one day . . . wouldn't it be grand to know you were fully protected.

Well, you can be. There's a new kind of insurance policy that covers everything you can think of, and lots of things you wouldn't think of until it was too late—and that actually saves you money on your existing insurance. It's the new General Insurance Company ULTRA Policy. It covers every conceivable contingency except accident and health and life insurance.

Let's go down the list. One policy covers:

Burglary—All your household and personal possessions, including theft of your car or its contents.

Furniture and Household Goods. All insured against loss by fire, flood, theft or almost any risk.

Windstorm, Hail, Flood—Damage to any of your personal property, by almost any cause.

Fire damage to any of your personal effects, furniture, belongings of all kinds, including your car and its contents, including damage by windstorm, explosion or other unforeseen causes.

Automobile—It covers not only your car, but if you happen to borrow a car because yours is in the shop, it covers any damage you may do to the car, or to people or property. And should any of your family cause injury to anyone and you are sued for damages, this policy protects you. If you or your wife are injured in any auto, it pays your medical expense, also each other person riding with you in your car. It may be extended to cover your children while riding in other automobiles.

Away from home, the plan follows and protects you—and stays home, too, to protect what you have left there.

Employees, to whom you would be liable for injury occurring on your premises, or while they were employed in your service, are covered fully.

Sports Accidents—Covering nearly all damages others may claim against you while hunting, fishing, golfing, boating, etc.

Precious possessions are all insured against damage, theft, fire or any other normal contingency.

In other words, complete coverage, full protection, and no need to worry about a dozen different insurance policies. Nor do you lose anything by cancelling existing policies. They run to their termination date. Automatically the Ultra Policy takes over and you are protected. The policy is tailored to fit your specific needs.

This remarkable policy has been introduced in Atlanta by Harrell & Co., 1065 Spring St. A phone call will bring you prompt and full information. Call HEmlock 1200.

WITH 'HYDRO-BRUSH' ACTION

New Youngstown Dishwasher Simplifies Kitchen Chores

Because it works on an entirely new principle, the automatic dishwasher developed by makers of Youngstown kitchens does what women have always wanted a dishwasher to do. It washes dishes really clean. Immaculate!

Youngstown's Jet-Tower with hydro-brush action—working in conjunction with super-hot, booster-heated water—enables the appliance to wash dishes, pots, pans, casseroles, glasses and silver not just clean but hygienically clean. Water is 185 degrees.

No pre-rinsing required on 90 percent of articles. The complete washing cycle, including two rinses, required only 9¾ minutes. Cover automatically opens for flash drying.

Women acclaim the Youngstown kitchen automatic dishwasher because it cleans itself with every washing. It uses only seven gallons of water per cycle; loads and unloads a complete service for six without removing dish racks.

No remodeling is required for installation of the dishwasher in most homes. Cabinet is 27 inches wide. The Youngstown kitchens electric sink, which includes the dishwasher, of course, is 48 inches wide. The dishwasher may also be purchased in combination with Youngstown kitchens cabinet sinks.

Demonstrations may be seen in dealers' showrooms in practically every Georgia city and town. Distributor is the Chas. S. Martin Distributing Co., Inc., 250-256 Peachtree St., N. W. Branches are maintained in Savannah and Albany.

Anxiety, Prayer Mark Christmas Observance

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A world in conflict observed Christmas somberly Monday, mingling anxiety over war threats with prayers for peace.

The solemnity of this year's celebration of the birthday of the Prince of Peace was reflected in the preaching of pontiff and monarch invoking peace and love.

It was reflected in the grave faces of the thousands who attended church services in the United States and throughout the world.

It extended to the dinner tables and family gatherings of thousands of Americans whose sons—and daughters—were in Korea, or Japan, or with troops in occupation zones of Europe where a blow might fall if war comes.

For them—and for some Britons and Puerto Ricans—there was a lightening of the burden of grief in the announcement on Christmas that more than 100,000 men fighting with the UN forces in Korea had been brought out successfully from a slaughter trap in northeast Korea.

But for many homes there was the sad knowledge their sons would be home never more. Behind them, the evacuating forces left many a cross or star in a wind-swept, wintry Army graveyard in Korea.

The invocation to love came in the sad, slow, gentle tones of Britain's King George VI broadcasting his thirteenth Christmas message to Britons all over the world.

"If our world is to survive in any sense that makes survival worth while, it must learn to love, not to hate," the monarch said, "to create not to destroy."

He referred to the sadness of British households whose men were at the Korean front and acknowledged that "it is hard to feel happiness and merriment which naturally belong to Christmas when the grim shadow of war hangs over the world."

The King said modern life paralleled the troubles of the pilgrim in John Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress" and repeated his motto: "Whatever comes or does not come, I will not be afraid."

There was quiet jubilation in the words of President Truman, mirroring the feelings of those thousands whose men may have gotten out of the Hungnam beachhead.

"This saving of our men in this isolated beachhead is the best Christmas message I have had," he said at Independence, Mo., where he celebrated quietly by exchanging personal gifts with his family before a Christmas dinner, and talked with neighbors.

In Korea, soldiers cut stars from the tins that held their food rations and decorated fir trees. Many ate turkey dinners.

Cpl. Jerry Zogg, of Pontiac, Ill., summed up their sentiment, "It will never come up to Mom's cooking," he said. Then he added the thought that imbued so many homes here. "I'm really at home in spirit," he said, "and I hope they know I'm with them."

The invocation to peace came in the Christmas message of 74-year-old Pope Pius XII who celebrated a solemn midnight Christmas Mass at the main altar of St. Peter's Cathedral after ceremonies closing the celebration of Holy Year at Vatican City. Later he signed the papal bull extending Holy Year indulgencies throughout 1951 in the rest of the world, calling for a year of prayer and penance and peace.

Queen Juliana of the Netherlands called on her own people to join other peoples in voluntary cooperation to make the world "a secure and fruitful place."

But the fears of war underlay the broadcast of another government leader, West Germany's Chancellor Konrad Adenauer.

He declared peace is the primary aim of his government but added "there are situations when even the peaceful must gather their forces and prepare their hearts for the defense of the values of life against a threatening attack."

While diplomats and pilgrims celebrated Christmas at Bethlehem and Nazareth, new mutterings of Arab-Jew conflict were heard. Egyptian government heads charged Israeli troops were massing south and east of Bethlehem.

Christmas at the Cradle of Christ symbolized today's divisions in the world. Bethlehem lies in Jordan territory. Nazareth is in Israel territory. Jordan and Israel keep peace under a military truce.

A midnight mass was celebrated in the Church of the Nativity in Bethlehem. Represetnatives of Jordan's King Abdullah welcomed the celebrants and Archbishop Albert Gori, Patriarch of Jerusalem.

Behind the Iron Curtain, only the western colony celebrated Christmas in Moscow with lighted trees and family gatherings.

Russian Orthodox Christmas is observed Jan. 7 with impressive Christmas Eve services in churches. This is preceded by family trees and gift-giving on New Year's Day.

In Warsaw, foreigners attending masses heard what they called a courageous pastoral letter from the Polish Primate Archbishop Stefan Wyszynski. Read in all churches, it called on the faithful to be devoted first to God and not to party or worldly things.

Communist Bulgaria held a special Parliament session to outlaw what it called "war propaganda."

Communist-controlled Czechoslovakia celebrated Christmas Monday, however. It has not adopted the Eastern European holiday calendar. Father Christmas—Santa Claus—comes early in December in Czechoslovak celebrations but home celebrations always follow services in the predominant Roman Catholic Churches Dec. 25.

Board Finds U. S. Families In Good Financial Status

WASHINGTON, Dec. 25—(AP)—About four in 10 American families had a net worth of $5,000 or more early in 1950, the Federal Reserve Board reported Monday night.

Nearly one in 10 was worth $25,000 or more.

Net worth was figured by taking the value of Government bonds, bank accounts or other savings accounts, homes, farms, real estates, securities or business interests and deducting from that total of assets the total amount of debt owed.

The Board said about half the nation's 52,000,000 "consumer spending units"—mostly families living together and pooling incomes, but also some individuals living alone—owed no debts at all when the Board took its survey some months ago.

Being debt-free doesn't mean much in itself. The Board found that people with lots of assets usually have debts, too, and the tenth of the population with highest incomes owed about one-fourth of the $65,000,000,000 total of consumer debt.

The Board itself rated its figures on family solvency as cheery, since it had earlier reported that one-third of the nation's families overspent their incomes in 1949—when prices were lower than now.

Among the families that overspent income last year, six in every 10 still had a net worth of $1,000 or more in early 1950, it reported.

Homes usually represented a "substantial proportion" of consumer assets. About one-third of the families with an annual income of $1,000 to $2,000 owned a home—a high proportion reflecting the fact many retired people own homes—and two-thirds of families with incomes above $7,500 were home owners.

About 21,000,000 non-farm families owned their own homes although nearly half of them still owed on a mortgage or some other type of house debt.

"About half of the spending units having incomes of less than $1,000 value their homes at less than $5,000, and only about a tenth of this income group value their houses at $10,000 or more," the Board said.

"About three-fourths of the spending units with incomes of $7,500 or more value their homes at $10,000 or more. Over a fourth of this higher income group value their homes at $20,000 or more."

Slightly more than half of all the families—or spending units—owned autos, and one in each 25 owned more than one car. Car ownership ranged from one in five among families with income under $1,000 to nine out of 10 with incomes above $7,500.

Corporate stock ownership was less frequent—only about seven out of 100 families had common or preferred stock in corporations open to investment by the general public, the Board said.

Bomber Rains Gifts On Front-Line Troops

TOKYO, Dec. 25 — (AP) — United Nations front-line troops looked up from their Korean foxholes on Christmas Day and saw an American B-29 with yawning bomb bay doors.

The load that came tumbling down wasn't lethal. It was books, magazines, candy, cigars, cigarettes and canned beer—a Christmas gift to the forward ground troops from the 91st Photo Reconnaissance Squadron.

More than 3,000 individual items, weighing more than 1,000 pounds, were dropped to the troops. All were purchased by members of the Squadron.

Lt. Col. Edward D. Edwards of Altadena, Calif., commanding the Squadron, flew along with the regular crew of the bomber. It was piloted by Lt. Earl E. Myers, of Independence, Mo.

Tanker Blast, Fire Leave 2 Injured, $3-Million Loss

NEW ORLEANS, Dec. 25—(AP)—The flame-seared tanker Esso Baltimore is preparing to move into its berth after firemen won a fight against oil-fed flames that threatened the Port of New Orleans for a time.

Two crewmen are hospitalized and unofficial estimates placed damage to the tanker as high as $3,000,000. The Esso Baltimore and a tow of oil barges collided in the Mississippi River Sunday night, with an explosion setting both afire.

The blaze in the 10,080-ton ship brought 20 pieces of fire-fighting equipment to the banks of the river. One of the oil barges ran wild after the collision and endangered the city's port.

But five hours of fighting the flames brought them under control.

The seamen injured are Jack Trainor, 29, of Providence, R. I., and John M. Joyce, 24, of Paterson, N. J. Both had to plunge into the river to escape the flames. They are being treated for shock and exposure.

The rest of the 44-man crew on the tanker was reported safe.

Capt. John Markey, commander of the fireboat Deluge, said a hole 75 feet wide may have saved the life of all aboard the tanker. He said if the barge had not torn the hole, the explosion could have blown the craft to bits.

Six other boats helped battle the fire.

The Deluge put out the fire in the loose barge, possibly saving it from setting fire to the riverfront. Another tug retrieved it and moored it across the river from New Orleans.

Actor Tuft's Wife Plans Divorce

HOLLYWOOD, Dec. 25—(AP)—Mrs. Barbara Tufts, wife of Actor Sonny Tufts, Monday disclosed she had been separated "for some time" from her husband.

She said she had talked with her lawyer and soon would file suit to end their 14-year marriage. They still are living in the same house despite the separation, she said.

Women Picket Ike, Warn on Arming 'Nazis'

DENVER, Dec. 25—(AP)—Protesting the proposed rearming of Western Germany, three Denver housewives Monday picketed the home where Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower is spending Christmas.

The picketing, by two women of the Jewish faith and one Christian, was brief and orderly and was attributed to fears that rearming of the Germans might restore Nazi policy and lead to slaughter of countless Jews.

Seeking an audience with the military leader who is charged with shaping Western Europe's defenses against Communist aggression, the women marched in front of the home of Mr. and Mrs. John S. Doud, Eisenhower's parents-in-law.

The placards they carried read:

"We have not forgotten Lidice, Buchenwald, Dachau Maidenek." (These references were to the Czech village of Lidice, wiped out by the Germans in World War II and to three of the more notorious of Nazi death camps.)

"Two hundred thousand rearmed Germans mean a Nazi army. Will you lead Nazis, Mr. Eisenhower?"

"A Nazi army will not bring peace."

They identified themselves to reporters as Mrs. Lee Wood, Mrs. Baila Lindenauer and Mrs. Susan Clute, all of Denver. They all said they greatly admire Eisenhower, but fear rearming of Germany.

YOUR STARS TODAY

Sun In Capricorn

General Tendencies—Somehow this looks like a better day for a celebration than yesterday might have been, what with the moon going into the sign Leo where it always stimulates good times and lively companions. The last week of this month is bound to be full of surprises which may result in unplanned journeys or household conditions—these can begin today and last right up until New Year's Day. Do not count too strongly upon plans which may be formulated in advance.

If It's Your Birthday—The next 12 months ought to begin with a whiz and a bang for you, pleasant or not according to the way you may take it. If you are ultra-conservative you may not like the many quick changes which seem necessary, but if you can adopt yourself to new conditions quickly then you will be pleased with some of the chances for increased income which seem to be headed your way. Make your decisions before the first part of the summer; you will not find large profits later on.

Pharmacists Mate Scores 3 'Firsts'

By PAUL JONES

Three "firsts" were combined in the Pulitzer Prize Playhouse's presentation last Friday night (WSB-TV) of "The Pharmacists Mate"—a presentation which certainly has caused no little concern on the part of the Hollywood trade.

First of the "firsts" was that the entire production was filmed in Hollywood, under the direction of former RKO President N. P. Rathvon, expressly for teevee. It was the "first" time the Navy had turned over its facilities—in this instance a submarine — to teevee. And it represented Budd Schulberg's (author of "What Makes Sammy Run" and "The Disenchanted" first writing assignment for television.

Brian Donlevy

Production was excellent. Lighting was in somewhat lower key than most teevee offerings, but this heightened dramatic quality. Acting of Brian Donlevy, Gene Raymond and heavyweight cast was superb. Story material was somewhat "heavy" for that season, however. If this is an example of what teevee can do in its first attempt at a Hollywood film for teevee, I'd say Hollywood had better take serious notice. Judicious editing to a 60-minute running time made it a compact yarn, more punch-laden than the 85- and 90-minute flickers on the silver screen.

CHRISTMAS is over and teevee has shot its big guns. Interest now points to the New Year's show, but before we get into those, the big networks will divert their interest toward just "good programs."

On the agenda for Tuesday night are:

A play by Circle Theater, "Christopher Beach" which sounds especially inviting. It'll be on WSB-TV at 9:30, with Barbara Britton and Tyler Carpenter costarring. It's a comedy romance which opens when an author arrives in a small town to autograph his first novel. We say: "Take a look."

Drama takes the spotlight on WSB-TV at 9, also, when John Loder heads a Broadway cast in "One More Night," a sketch based on the romantic life of a young man who is married to an invalid.

A Damon Runyon classic, first of the late writer's works to go before the teevee cameras, will provide a holiday event for WAGA-TV's Suspense at 9:30. . . . Wally Cox will be starred in "Dancing Dan's Christmas."

Chico Marx joins brother Harpo (Friday night star on WSB-TV's Bet Your Life) when he steps into starring role in "Love Happy" at 10:30 on WAGA-TV

And don't overlook Milton Berle who came up with a grand 60 minutes of variety entertainment last week. He's on in the regular spot at 8 on WSB-TV.

* * *

GEORGIA'S GEN. LUCIUS CLAY, recently appointed assistant to Charles Wilson, Economic Stabilizer, will appear on a special documentary show on WAGA-CBS at 10:30 p. m. entitled "Through the Iron Curtain." Also at the mike will be a group of exiles recently escaped from Russia's satellite countries.

While teevee is turning its cameras on drama Tuesday night, radio (WSB-NBC) will turn its mike over to Screen Star Lee Bowman to play the part of a Southern officer in the War Between the States at 8 on Cavalcade of America's presentation of "A Mockingbird Sang at Chickamauga."

Big Town spotlights the story of "Urn of the Borgias" at 10 on WSB-NBC, and Bing Crosby visits Bob Hope at 9 on WSB-NBC, also.

Drops Mother, 76, 13 Feet to Safety

NEWBURYPORT, Mass., Dec. 25—(AP)—Charles C. Withers, 46, dropped his 76-year-old mother, Una, 13 feet from a second-story window onto a lilac bush and then jumped to safety as fire raced through his home early Monday.

Withers first led his wife, Margaret, 42, and his daughter, Josephone, 13, to safety and then returned to the burning house to rescue his mother.

Both Una and Margaret are being treated at Anna Jaques Hospital for shock. Their conditions were described as "not serious."

Damage to the 150-year-old house was estimated unofficially at about $15,000.
